U. S. TRAMPLES CITIZEN RIGHTS, HOGAN CHARGES

DISTRICT BAR LEADER CONVENTION SPEAKER

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT.

Invasion of rights of citizens "under color of Government power" was attacked last night by Frank J. Hogan, president of the District Bar Association, before the annual banquet of the American Bar Association at the Mayflower Hotel.

Search and seizure, wire tapping and "bargains made for criminals" were assailed by Mr. Hogan as manifestations of the "ignoble" part he said is played by the Government. These, he said, are excused "by resort to the vicious principle that the end justifies the means."

The District Bar president joined with W. F. Lilleston, Wichita attorney, in an assault on the eighteenth amendement, which Mr. Hogan termed "a monstrous legal blunder." He said the eighteenth amendemnt and the Volstead act are "breeders of crime," and crime is "lashed into destructive fury by the powers of gangland," born of prohibition.

Makes Humorous Address.

Lilleston, in a humorous address, said the "elastic" Constitution has been "vulcanized" nineteen times, and the "eighteenth patch" is now threatened with a "blowout."

The final event in the association's four-day session, the banquet followed a day spent in sightseeing trips to various points of interest.

A plea for "world solidarity," echoing views expressed Friday by Lord Reading of England and Paul Reynaud, of France, was voiced at the banquet by Newton Wesley Rowell, of Canada.

Recognition of world solidarity and of the necessity of international cooperation in political affairs must be extended to economic affairs "if the world is to escape from the present economic distress and paralysis," he told the barristers.

Hails Stimson View.

He hailed the Stimson interpretation of the Pact of Paris that all ideas of neutrality based on the theory that war is a lawful means of settling disputes have become obsolete, as of primary importance to Canadian-American relations.

Mr. Rowell cited criticisms in Canada that under the League covenant Canada might, in the discharge of her obligations, find herself committed to a course conflicting with the principles of neutrality this country espouses.

"The interpretation which Mr. Stimson has placed, and I believe properly placed, upon the Kellogg-Briand peace pact will largely remove the basis for this criticism," he said.

The Stimson pledge to sit in consultation with other nations in all matters affecting world peace, he likewise declared of paramount significance. The Lytton commission's report on the Sino-Japanese dispute he viewed as "a great advance in international cooperation for the peaceable settlement of international disputes."

Mr. Hogan, in his defense of constitutional safeguards against Federal encroachments on private rights, sug-

Curtis Is Injured In Auto Accident

Salt Lake City, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Vice President Charles Curtis, suffering from a strained right shoulder resulting from an automobile collision while he was en route here today from Ogden, Utah, entered upon a program which included attendance at a football game this afternoon, dinner this evening with Senator and Mrs. Reed Smoot and a public address in the Mormon Tabernacle later.

The Vice President's injury occurred when the car in which he was riding with Senator Smoot, Ernest Bamberger, Republican national committeeman from Utah, and Col. Sherman Bullock, his aid, collided with a machine driven by Mrs. M. Pechart, 67, of Wendover, Utah. Mr. Curtis, sitting in the rear seat, was thrown violently forward and his right side and shoulder were hurt.

A physician who examined him after his arrival here said the ligaments were strained. The injury was not expected to interfere with the remainder of the Vice President's program here.

WOMAN, 86, DROWNS IN POTOMAC PLUNGE

Despondent Over Daughter's Illness and Death of Son Recently.

Overwrought by the critical illness of her daughter and the recent death of a favorite son, an 86-year-old woman plunged to a watery death in the chilly current of the Potomac from the seawall a few yards from the Washington end of Highway Bridge just before dusk last night.

The woman, Mrs. Sally Burch, was pulled from the water after ten minutes' frantic effort by park police, who were summoned by a passerby, Homer W. Myers, 708 Nineteenth street northwest, who saw her fall or leap over the rail along the seawall.

Fire Rescue Squad apparatus, hastily summoned, worked on the woman for half an hour, but their efforts were unsuccessful. An Emergency Hospital interne pronounced the woman dead.

On a bench near the scene of Mrs. Burch's drowning, police found her coat and pocketbook, neatly laid aside. First identification was established by a letter addressed to the dead woman at 921 New Hampshire avenue northwest, which, it developed, was the home of Mrs. Burch.

A Post reporter was the first to break the news to relatives of Mrs. Burch. Members of her family said the serious illness of her daughter, Mrs. Sadie Ewen, had caused her much concern of late. The drowned woman was last seen when she went for a stroll about 4 o'clock, it was said.

Death of a son in New York State recently also was said to have preyed on Mrs. Burch, one of whose grandsons is a District policeman.

Sergt. W. F. Shelton and Privates Grover Shumaker and William Hammond were the park policemen who retrieved Mrs. Burch from the river. They were at the polo grounds nearby when summoned by Myers.

Grappling ropes and hooks were placed in the park police patrol car in which Sergt. Shelton and his men were riding for the first time this morning and this circumstance was pointed to as responsible for the quick recovery of the woman's body, though no sign of it was visible when the rescuers appeared on the scene.

Besides the daughter, the woman is survived by nine grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Three of the grandchildren and all of the great-grandchildren live at home.

Two Held on Bond In Kidnaping Plot

Millionaires Wintering in California Intended Ransom Victims.

Redlands, Calif., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Two of four men suspected by police of plotting to kidnap at least ten millionaires wintering in southern California, including Clarence C. White, Cleveland, Ohio, philanthropist, were arraigned today on charges of criminal conspiracy and attempted extortion, and held under $25,000 bail each.

The two men, Charles W. Lombard, 36, and William Snyder, 35, and a third, Eddie Dow, 30, who with the fourth, Ernest Tex Ward, 23, is in the San Bernardo County Jail without charge, were arrested in the vicinity of the home of Dr. C. L. Lombard, wealthy retired Redlands physician, but no relation to Charles Lombard, under arrest.

Authorities said Dr. Lombard and White were but two of the moneyed men who were to be victims of the ransom kidnaping plot. Lombard, Snyder and Dow, police said, confessed they intended kidnaping Dr Lombard and White and hold them for ransom. The names of other intended victims were unannounced.

RELIEF PARLEY TO MEET CRISIS IN CAPITAL SET

Commissioners to Confer With Welfare Board This Week.

STARVATION DEATHS DECLARED POSSIBLE

Aid Funds Must Be Obtained Before Congress Session, Committee Says.

The District Commissioners and the Board of Public Welfare will confer this week regarding the proposal of the special committee on emergency relief that "extraordinary" means be employed to obtain additional funds to carry on the present inadequate unemployment relief work until an appropriation can be obtained from Congress.

In a report portraying distress in Washington, the committee yesterday recommended that another relief appropriation be asked at the earliest possible date and that an appeal be made to the District and Federal governments and to private property owners for "free quarters for the housing of persons who may find themselves without shelter."

The special committee in charge of the rapidly dwindling relief fund has already determined to discontinue payments of rents because of the much greater need for food and clothing for the approximately 10,000 applicants for relief.

Need for Funds at Once.

The committee stated that one of three steps must be taken at once as the remainder of the $350,000 fund "is entirely inadequate to meet the demands which have been and will be made upon it before another appropriation of Congress can be obtained." They are:

(1) Additional funds must be obtained by some "extraordinary means" to carry on the work of the emergency relief division of the welfare board, or

(2) Private relief agencies must take over the major portion of the work now being done by the welfare board, or

(3) "During the next six months there will be in Washington cases of destitute, homeless and helpless families, and the special committee believes there may actually be deaths by starvation."

Limit on Expenditures.

That the private relief agencies are financially unable to take over the burden is obvious, as many cases the welfare board is now handling were transferred from these same agencies, whose resources were long ago exhausted or overburdened.

Despite early decisions to limit expenditures to $50,000 a month, the committee declared that a "careful estimate of the necessary expenditures during the month of October to care for only the cases already approved for assistance (i. e. 4,181 families on October 8, with 1,743 cases pending) is the sum of $129,690.81." If allowance were made for the natural increase in cases, the need would be $160,710.81. Nevertheless, so as to prevent the exhaustion of the entire fund by November

Philander C. Knox Held On Fugitive Warrant

Philander C. Knox, 43, of 2924 Twenty-eighth street northwest, son of the late Philander Knox, Secretary of State during President Taft's administration and former senator from Pennsylvania, was arrested by Washington police yesterday on a warrant charging him with being a fugitive from justice.

According to the police, he is wanted in King George County, Va., on a charge of larceny. It is alleged he took his automobile after authorities there attached the car on a judgment. He posted $1,000 bond.

Policeman Bailed On Assault Charge

To Face Court Tomorrow; Commandeered Bus and Fired Shots.

Policeman William E. Atkinson, of the Ninth Precinct, who, during what he termed a mental lapse on the night of September 27, commandeered a bus and fired six shots, was released from Gallinger Hospital yesterday and posted $500 bond for his appearance in court tomorrow on a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon.

Dr. John A. Reed, police surgeon, who examined Atkinson after he was subdued by police at Eighteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, said Atkinson told him he had no recollection of what he was doing.

The Gridiron Parade

Pitt became the outstanding team in the East, with an 18-to-13 victory over Army. Yale figured in another upset, losing to Brown, 7 to 2. Harvard crushed Penn State, 46 to 13; Penn toppled Dartmouth, 14 to 7, and Princeton played Cornell to a scoreless tie. Navy lost to Ohio University, 14 to 0.

Tennessee scored the major victory in the South, beating Alabama, 7 to 3. Tulane and Vanderbilt waged a 6-to-6 tie.

Michigan and Purdue maintained unbeaten slates in the Big Ten, defeating Ohio State and Wisconsin, respectively, 14 to 0 and 7 to 6.

Of the local teams, Georgetown was routed by New York U., 39 to 0; Catholic U. beat Chattanooga, 19 to 0; George Washington downed Catawba, 27 to 0, and Maryland lost to Duke, 34 to 0.

ONE GUARD IS GUILTY IN SWEAT-BOX CASE

Jacksonville, Fla., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—George W. Courson, who testified in the sweat box murder trial that his attitude toward Arthur Maillefert, young prisoner, was that of a benign father, was found guilty of manslaughter today, but the jury accepted Solomon Higginbotham's story that he applied the Golden Rule in handling Maillefert and acquitted him.

The manslaughter penalty in Florida is two to twenty years.

The two former guards were charged with first degree murder for the death of the Westfield, N. J., youth, strangled to death in a sweat box at Sunbeam prison camp last June 3, his feet in stocks and hanging by his neck on a chain locked around a rafter overhead.

The jury deliberated only 2 hours and 16 minutes. The verdict was received with no demonstration in the courtroom, and even without visible effect on Mrs. Julia Maillefert, mourning-clad mother of the dead youth. Mrs. Maillefert, silent but often weeping quietly as stories of tortures alleged to have been inflicted on her son were told from the witness stand, had sat at the State's counsel table through the two weeks of the trial.

Counsel for Courson filed notice of an application for new trial as soon as the verdict was read. The 285-pound former captain of the camp where Maillefert died said he "hoped for better luck at the next trial."

Brookland Priest Gets Vatican Post

Vatican City, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Pope Pius XI today nominated Father William Doheny, of the Holy Cross Order of Brookland, District of Columbia, as advocate of the Rota. Father Doheny is now head of the Holy Cross Seminary in Rome.

Father Doheny has been in Rome for several years, it was said last night at the home of Mgr. Pietro Fumasoni-Biondi, apostolic delegate.

The Rota is a high tribunal of the Roman Catholic Church which sits on public cases involving a conflict of rights. As an advocate Father Doheny would appear before the Rota in the role of attorney.

SMITH TO JOIN ROOSEVELT IN FINAL RALLIES

CAMPAIGN PLANNED BY FORMER NOMINEE

Addresses Will Be Delivered in Newark, Boston, Providence, Troy, Buffalo.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the man he termed the "happy warrior,"—Alfred E. Smith—will share the platform in Democracy's closing campaign rallies in New York.

This became a certainty today as Democratic chieftains, desirous of further campaigning by Speaker John N. Garner, awaited a decision from the vice presidential nominee on a proposed tour of the West.

Headliners on Program.

The standard bearer of the Democrats and his predecessor at Albany—who effected a reconciliation at the State convention two weeks ago—will headline the programs at the Brooklyn Academy of Music November 4, and at Madison Square Garden, November 5.

Aside from the Roosevelt rallies, former Gov. Smith, his office announced late today, will make the following tour after an address Wednesday at Tammany Hall:

October 24, Newark, N. J.; October 27, Boston and Providence; October 29, Buffalo; November 2, Troy.

Speeches to Be Broadcast.

The Newark and Boston addresses, Mr. Smith's office said, will be broadcast over a Nation-wide radio hook-up. The former, it was indicated, would be in the nature of a reply to Calvin Coolidge's recent New York address.

In his speeches, Mr. Smith is expected by party leaders to give a complete indorsement of Gov. Roosevelt's candidacy.

The 1928 presidential nominee will also address a dinner, October 26, in honor of Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, president of the Women's Organization for Prohibition Reform. This will be a nonpartisan affair.

Way Cleared for Avenol As League's Secretary

Geneva, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The assembly of the League of Nations tonight settled upon a plan for distribution of the higher posts of the secretariat which definitely cleared the path for the election of a Frenchman, Joseph Avenol, as secretary general, to succeed Sir Eric Drummond, the Englishman, resigned.

The distribution plan was formulated through the assembly's committee on reorganization of the secretariat, and immediately the committee had announced its action, the council nominated M. Avenol for secretary general.

Bandits Injure Camden Man and Take $2,021

Camden, N. J., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Knocking their victim down with the butt of a pistol, three robbers today held up Joseph Leff, 47, proprietor of the Reliable Cloak Co., South Camden, and escaped with a $2,021 pay roll.

30,000 Veterans Put Claims Before Bureau

10,000 Soldier Cases Also Pending in Federal Courts; Administration Is Most Sued and Most Costly Unit.

By ROSCOE CONKLIN.

With more than 10,000 veterans' cases now pending in the Federal courts, and with thousands of additional claims in the offing, the Veterans' Administration is rapidly achieving the doubtful distinction of being the most sued—and the most costly—of all of Uncle Sam's departments.

There are some 30,000 cases now awaiting adjudication in the Veterans' Administration, and in the event of a refusal by the bureau to pass favorably on them all can be carried to the Federal courts for a final hearing, thus making it possible for thousands of additional suits to pile up in the courts.

The awards already made—both through court decisions and favorable action at the Veterans Administration total $1,500,000,000 or, rather, a liability of that amount has been incurred by the Government with the end not in sight.

Here in the District, the situation as to the court cases is chaotic, despite the unceasing fight of John W. Wood and Walter M. Shea, two assistant United States attorneys, to straighten out the tangle. The cases under file mark—excluding all that will be filed in the future, and they are being filed in groups every day—will take more than eight years to try.

Each case presents problems never before seen in the courts. Costly depositions, expert testimony, long trips to locate important witnesses, voluminous files and the veteran himself are but a few of the barriers that must be handled by the two attorneys here.

They must be well acquainted with medical testimony, must have the complete service record of each man, together with his hospital records and claims. Just recently, a Midwestern physician who had been asked, while he was testifying for a veteran,

HOOVER TELLS CLEVELAND CROWDS DEMOCRATS ISSUE FALSE REPORTS ON SLUMP

Fighting Answer Made Before 40,000.

Refutes Charges He Once Used Cheap Chinese Labor.

Public Hall, Cleveland, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—President Hoover asserted tonight, while a police-estimated throng of 40,000 persons listened, that Democratic leaders had circulated "absolutely untrue" reports as to the origin of the Nation's economic strain, and had issued "contemptible statements" concerning his personal career.

Given a two-minute ovation as he entered the auditorium—the hall where Calvin Coolidge was nominated in 1924—the President time and again launched out in his lengthy address against statements he quoted from speeches by "the Democratic candidate."

He asserted the Democratic nominee had sought wrongly to give the impression the stock market crash was "the prime cause of this disaster." He characterized as "amazing statements" quotations from "the Democratic candidate" that the Smoot-Hawley tariff was "one of the most important factors in the present world-wide depression."

Introduced by Ingalls.

Interrupted by applause, the Chief Executive's speech came as the climax of a day in which he spoke from the rear platform of his special train as it crossed four States to throngs estimated by police to total more than 100,000.

The President's audience tonight was divided into four parts, three of the sections listening through loud speakers in other sections of the auditorium and outside. He was introduced by David S. Ingalls, Ohio Republican gubernatorial nominee.

Ingalls said the President could not even get any one to write his speeches "because no one else" had the "knowledge of existing conditions, the intellect to plan for the future or the ability to carry out those plans comparable to Herbert Hoover."

The President was called by Ingalls "the greatest peace-time leader our country has ever known."

The crowd yelled as Ingalls concluded his introduction with a prediction that the President would be reelected.

Commends Ohio Nominees.

The President, dressed in a gray business suit, stood before the microphone quietly smiling as the crowd applauded and the band played. He stopped the ovation after less than two minutes by raising his arms.

Before he began his prepared address the President said he wished to "commend to the people of Ohio their Republican nominees for both State and national offices."

Interpolating further, he said he had come to Cleveland because of "the depth of my feeling" that it is of "vital interest to the Nation that the war against economic forces now in progress should be carried on under a Republican administration." A change in leadership, he asserted, might change the "present victorious progress into defeat."

Democratic Mayor Applauds.

The platform was so large that it held an American Legion band as well as the throng of distinguished guests. The crowded galleries of the auditorium, stretched around the hall in U-shape, looked like a football stadium.

The crowd laughed and applauded when Mr. Hoover said Democrats ignored Russia's dumping "in a desperate effort to secure money with which to carry on—shall I call it—a new deal?"

Highlights of Speech

I do not underrate the distressing losses to millions of our people or the weakening of our strength from the mania of speculation and flotation of securities, but I may incidentally remark that the State governments have the primary responsibility to protect their citizens in these matters and that the vast majority of such transactions originated or took place in the State of New York.

Our opponents demand to know why the governmental leaders or business men over the world did not foresee the approach of these disintegrating forces. * * * No man can foresee the coming fear or panic or the extent of its effect. I did not notice any Democratic Jeremiahs.

So they (the Democrats) would have us believe this world catastrophe and this destruction on foreign trade happened because the United States increased tariffs on one-fourth of one-third of one-eighth of the world's imports. Thus we pulled down the world, so they tell us, by increases on less than 1 per cent of the goods being imported by the world.

There is a vital determination before the American people as to

CRAZED MAN HACKS PRIEST AND SISTER

Special to The Washington Post.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 15.—The Rev. John T. Norton, pastor of St. Augustine's Catholic Church, at Elkridge, and his sister, Miss Fannie Norton, were stabbed and hacked late this afternoon by a crazed sexton armed with a penknife and a crowbar.

Both the priest, who is about 60 years old, and his sister, who is about 5 years younger, were in a serious condition tonight at the St. Agnes Hospital.

The sexton, 60-year-old John Hess, was in the custody of the Halethorpe police, to whom he fully admitted the attacks and gave as his motive "nagging and ridicule" on the part of the priest and his sister.

Hess, who had been drinking heavily today, told the story of the assaults graphically, gesturing as though he were holding first a penknife and then a crowbar, as he stood in a cell at the Halethorpe Police Station.

From his account and that of William Cooney, a neighbor of the priest, who reached the scene of the struggle just in time to prevent Hess from renewing his attack upon the clergyman and his sister with an ax, the police assembled a complete version of the assault.

Hess, the police said, attacked Miss Norton with a penknife on the lawn of the rectory. When Father Norton came to her aid Hess turned his knife upon him, and as the priest fought, despite the knife thrusts, Hess grabbed a crowbar and beat him with it.

Leaving his victims unconscious on the lawn, Hess went to his quarters in a barn nearby. He returned a few moments later carrying an ax. Mr. Cooney dashed upon the lawn from the old Washington boulevard, on which the priest's home and church are located, and picking up a board hit Hess on the head and knocked him down.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Five robbers held up the branch of the Public National Bank at 275 East 169th street, the Bronx, today, subdued eight employes by firing four shots in the air and escaped with $15,000. The money had been taken from the vault and placed in the cages only a few minutes before the robbers entered.

One robber fired the four shots and shouted to the employes that the next volley would be to kill unless they all backed to the nearest wall and remained quiet.

Another robber vaulted the metal fence by the teller's cage nearest the door and scooped up the money. The four then ran to the street, joined a companion in the waiting automobile and sped away.

Anglo-Irish Trade War Negotiations Abandoned

London, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Representatives of the Irish Free State and the British government failed today to arrive at terms to end the economic warfare between the two countries and the negotiations were abandoned.

J. H. Thomas, British Dominions secretary, announced after two days of discussion with President Eamon de Valera of the Free State that the result had been failure and that the status of the issues between the two countries remained unchanged.

G. O. P. CANDIDATES WILL TOUR IN BODY

Richmond, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Virginia's Republican candidates for Congress, who must run at large since the invalidation of the 1932 redistricting act, have agreed to tour the State in a body and denounce the Democrats in unison for political gerrymandering.

The campaign which will be new to Virginia history, will find the Republicans taking a page from the political strategy book of Senator Huey P. Long, of Louisiana. The Virginia group plans to tour every section of the State, traveling in automobiles or busses equipped with loudspeakers to carry their voices to the crowds. They plan to concentrate on rural sections in the day and cities and large towns at night.

While the details were not announced it is expected that the campaign will get under way a week from Monday. Speakers will flay the dominant State party and will urge farmers and urban dwellers alike to repudiate the Democrats on the ground that Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson and "Light Horse Harry" Lee would not have sanctioned the redistricting act passed by the General Assembly and declared unconstitutional by the courts.

Charleston, S. C., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Charles W. Long, former Infantry first sergeant, was convicted of second degree murder in Federal Court here tonight in connection with the hatchet slaying of his wife and two children at Fort Moultrie.

Sentence was deferred until next week. The penalty may range from 10 years to life imprisonment. Long, who had served 30 years in the Army, pleaded insanity.

B.E.F. Officer Denies Hoover Visit 'Overture'

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—George H. Kleinholz, vice commander of the Bonus Expeditionary Force, said today that the resolutions adopted at the recent convention of the B. E. F. did not warrant an interpretation that a committee of veterans' visit to President Hoover was "an overture on the part of the B. E. F. to Mr. Hoover."

Chicago, Oct. 15 (U.P.).—Man's right to sue a woman for breach of promise was established in a court ruling today.

"There is no precedent for this case in American jurisprudence or common law," said Superior Judge Joseph B. David in denying demurrer of attorneys for Mrs. Mary Leutig Brown, Glencoe, to Alanson Malott's suit for $25,000 damages.

Stimson Will Speak In New York Tuesday

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, with an address in New York City Tuesday night, will lead the Republican speaking invasion of the East next week.

With the announcement that President Hoover's Madison Square Garden address would probably be November 1 came the word that Ogden L. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, would swing into the East from his Nation-wide stumping. After addresses in Cincinnati and Toledo next week, the Secretary will tour through New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut.

HOME LOAN BANKS OPEN FOR BUSINESS

(Associated Press.)

A chain of twelve Federal Home Loan banks, strung across the country, opened for business yesterday, ready to receive applications for loans on small home mortgages.

The new structure began official life without formality or celebration. At headquarters here Franklin W. Fort, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, said he was "very pleased to announce that every one of the twelve district banks opened by October 15, which was the mark set six weeks ago."

For 30 days past the banks have had subscription books open to afford member institutions opportunity to contribute capital. What was not taken locally is to be subscribed by the Treasury.

Board officials said no money is to be handed out by the new banks immediately, but that cash will begin flowing as soon as loan applications are approved. The mortgages to be taken are limited to those on homes valued at not more than $20,000.

Other Federal funds were made available for distribution yesterday as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation approved a total of $1,221,855 of relief loans to six States for immediate use.

The States receiving these funds are Arkansas, $529,000; Tennessee, $193,256; Ohio, $182,887; Oklahoma, $181,312; Montana, $95,000, and Michigan, $40,000.

The home loan system is designed primarily to permit commercial companies holding mortgages to rediscount them, making more money available to increase mortgages or extend them, particularly in cases where home owners are threatened with loss of the property through inability to meet payments due.

The board has set a minimum capitalization of $134,000,000 for the twelve regional banks, and the Treasury is empowered under the law to subscribe up to $125,000,000.

MEDICAL TEACHERS HONORED AT G.W.U.

New Faculty Members Are Welcomed at Meeting of Society.

The first meeting of the year of the George Washington University Medical Society, held last night at the Medical School, combined a reception in honor of new members of the medical faculty and scientific discussions by Dr. Sterling Ruffin, professor emeritus of medicine, and Perry Burgess, president of the Leonard Wood Memorial for the Eradication of Leprosy.

Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of the university, welcomed the new members of the staff, outlining briefly the university's program for the development of medical education.

In responding to the greeting, Dr. Errett Cyril Albritton declared that in coming to Washington these men "have recognized the ideals, calm strength and contagious enthusiasm of the leaders here," things, he said, "that can not live except in a community that gives them support. These new teachers, for the most part laboratory workers, accepted the opportunity to come to Washington in the confidence that they can pursue their research happily and to the highest advantage here."

Dean Earl Baldwin McKinley presented the new faculty members, including Dr. Albritton, from the Government Medical School at Bangkok, Siam; Dr. Vincent du Vigneaud, from the University of Illinois; Dr. Leland W. Parr, from the International Health Division of the Rockefeller Foundation; Dr. Roscoe Roy Spencer, of the National Research Council; Dr. Chester L. Leese, from the Harvard Medical School; Dr. John H. Hanks, from the Harvard Medical School; Dr. George Brewer, from Johns Hopkins University Medical School; Dr. Alden F. Roe, from the University of Michigan; Dr. Phoebe J. Crittenden, from Northwestern University; Dr. William F. Hamilton, from the University of St. Louis; Dr. Lane Allen, from the University of St. Louis; Dr. James L. Collins, from the University of Kansas; Herman A. Fisher, from the University of Tennessee; Dr. Alice Roberts, from Johns Hopkins University; Miss Rebecca Brown, from Goucher College, and Robert Seslock, Robert Sifferd, Hubert S. Loring and Dr. Jesse Harmon, from the University of Illinois.

He charged that officers of Government, "under the guise of law enforcement trample upon the most sacred constitutional rights of citizens."

"We are inclined to be more concerned," he said, "with whether ice manufacturing is a business affected with a public interest than with the more vital question whether the tapping of Government agents of telephone wires going into private homes is at once a violation of the fourth and fifth amendments and a criminal debasing of governmental activities.

Barter for Leniency.

"We are prone to sleep when, step by step, the search and seizure provisions of the Constitution are made effective; when legislative committees, under the thinly veiled guise of calling for information for legislative guidance, trample upon every right of privacy; when the grand jury is changed from a shield of protection to an engine of oppression; when in high places bargains are made with criminals who barter the liberties of others for cravenly purchased leniency."

"I came here," he said, "to advocate the repeal of the law of diminishing returns."

He said politics makes strange bedfellows "because they all use the same bunk." A reformer he defined as a man "whose virtue has settled on his lungs."

Other addresses were made by Owen J. Roberts, associate justice of the United States Supreme Court; Clarence E. Martin, of Martinsburg, W. Va., newly elected president, and Guy A. Thompson, retiring president, who served as toastmaster.

Disposition of Old Quarters Of Supreme Court in Doubt

Present Chamber May Be Made Senate Caucus Room When Tribunal Moves to New Structure; Popular Sentiment Calls for Preserving Historic Place.

By EDMUND G. MONK.

One day in 1934, the Supreme Court of the United States will forever cleave its physical self from the legislative structure of the Nation, thus vacating the old Senate chamber that it took over when the present Senate chamber was thrown open and occupied by that august body after completion of the north wing of the Capitol in 1859.

With the day of the removal of the highest court to the imposing edifice now under construction, the question is already being bruited about, "What will become of the old Senate chamber that has housed the Supreme Court?"

Final authority over the old chamber which has echoed to the forensic fire of Daniel Webster, of Henry Clay, of Stephen A. Douglas and other orators who wove the skeins of their declamation into the very fabric of the Nation, probably lies with the Senate committee on rules.

Surely, some say, the stately room will be preserved for posterity, that Americans may see the walls which inclosed Senate sessions that will forever live on the history books; that saw the robed justices of the most powerful judicial body in the world hand down innumerable momentous decisions.

One school of thought holds that the chamber may be remodeled to make room for anterooms, offices or other accessories necessary as the growth of the Nation swells the amount of detail handled by the staff of the Senate.

Another disposition advanced for the famous room is one put forward by the more practical minded. This plan would have the chamber renovated to provide a caucus room for the various political groups of the Senate. It was pointed out that the present caucus room is over in the Senate Office Building and that transformation of the old Senate chamber into such a meeting place would form a great saving of time and energy to senators at moments of legislative or other stress when a quick and properly appointed gathering forum is needed.

David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, approached on the subject, said he had heard little pertaining to the disposition of the famous chamber after the Supreme Court had left the Capitol. However, he expressed his personal hope that its historic atmosphere and importance would be preserved as far as possible.

Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, at present is chairman of the rules committee of the Senate. He was not in the city when sought and other members of the committee could not be reached as to their views on the subject.

The Supreme Court prior to 1860 occupied chambers directly below its present situation, moving in after the north wing was finished in 1859 with the present galleried auditorium that houses the Senate.

The south wing of the Capitol was completed in 1857, two years before the north wing was finished. The overflowing House of Representatives quickly moved into its present great hall, vacating its first quarters, which are now the site of Statuary Hall, where sculptured images of the favorite sons of the 48 States occupy places of honor.

What to do with the old House chamber concerned legislative minds for several years after its evacuation. It became a public gathering and lounging place. Hawkers of knickknacks, venders of fruit clustered in the old House hall. Finally in 1864 it was set aside as the repository of the statues of statesmen from the units of the Nation.

In the chamber to be vacated in 1934 by the highest court were threshed out numerous of the problems the solutions of many of which form the bulwark of the Nation today. Here it was that the statesmen of the "golden age" met in oratorical combat.

Here Senators Benton, Jeff Davis, Stephen A. Douglas, Daniel Webster, Hayne, Calhoun fought the pro and con oral strife of the slavery question that preceded the great War of the Rebellion. Other legislative and political struggles that fill volumes of history were waged in the chamber which may in 1934 become the meeting place of twentieth century senatorial blocs.

Washington Quota of Home Bank Stock Oversubscribed

$493,400 Offerings Nearly 25 Per Cent in Excess of Figure Set, Chamber Head Announces; Subscriptions Still Will Be Received.

That Washington financial institutions have oversubscribed their stock quota for the new Federal Home Loan Bank was revealed yesterday by President Harry King of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, which body has been acting as the local clearing house of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. The work is supervised by a special committee headed by E. C. Baltz, recently chosen vice chairman of the system for the Washington region.

Washington's stock quota was $400,000, while the total subscriptions received to date amount to $493,400 or almost 25 per cent in excess of quota. The list of local institutions subscribing includes: American Building Association, District Building and Loan Association, Eastern Building and Loan Association, Fidelity Building and Loan Association, National Permanent Building Association, Northeast Building Association, Oriental Building Association, Perpetual Building Association, Washington Permanent Building Association.

The chamber announcement corrected the impression that stock subscriptions from eligible institutions will not be received after the end of the initial month's subscription period, which ended yesterday. The subscription books are still open and will continue so until further notice.

Mr. Baltz stressed this point, stating that all eligible local institutions have signified their intention of becoming members of the Federal Home Loan Bank system. Under the provisions of the Federal Home Loan act the subscriptions paid in by Washington institutions entitle them to borrow from the central bank up to twelve times the amount of their cash subscriptions.

Thus a total subscription of $500,000 would enable local mortgage bankers to borrow $6,000,000 if the whole cost of such stock had been paid. In most instances, however, the stock will be paid for in four quarterly installments, and the "twelve times" rule in every instance will apply only to the actual amount of cash paid in for stock.

VETERANS' BUREAU CLOGGED BY CLAIMS MADE BY 30,000

what a certain medical symbol meant, testified that he didn't know, although he had answered the question in the affirmative.

His testimony was then taken over by the judge who sharply reprimanded him for answering a question when he didn't know what the question was. Of course, such instances are exceptions.

The claims that are now jamming the courts are cases arising, for the most part, out of insurance policies that were allowed to lapse by the holders. These suits have no connection with the payment by the Government of disability compensation, which is paid because of the inability of the veteran to follow his prewar occupation.

Large Number Filed Here.

The claims arise out of instances in which a veteran "died or became totally and permanently disabled from continuously following a substantially gainful occupation." The injuries bringing out these dire results must have been received while the policy was in force; hence, the disability must have occurred no later than 1918.

The typical case requires almost a week of undivided attention from either Mr. Wood or Mr. Shea. The actual trial time is about two days, though some cases have taken a week. Too, in a considerable portion of the cases, there is a "hung" jury or a new trial granted upon some technical ground.

The large number of cases filed here is accounted for by the fact that Congress provided that suits upon lapsed policies could be filed in the District Supreme Court, or in one of the Federal courts of the States, the only reservation being that outside of this city the claimant must be a resident of the State in which he institutes suit.

The maximum liability of the Government on the thousands of cases awaiting trial is hard to estimate. Besides a cash award, the successful veteran is paid a regular monthly allotment, and this continues for the life of the veteran, providing he does not recover—and recoveries have thus far been notable by their absence.

For example, a veteran with a severe anatomical disturbance may live to a ripe old age, with an assured payment going to him each month. Unless something unusual crops up, the veteran remains on the files as a total and permanently disabled person until death.

"Disabled" Veterans Often Work.

To add to the troubles of Wood and Shea, the veteran has proven himself a migratory sort of a man. Thus it is necessary to trace the usual case through the States, and oftentimes over a major portion of the world to investigate activities of the claimant since discharged from the service. It happens not infrequently that the investigators learn that the claimant has worked steadily at manual labor in some place, despite his "disability."

Although the usual time limit within which suits must be filed against the Government is six year, Congress has let down the bars on several occasions. The last "dead line" was July 3, 1931, but in that act, the solons permitted cases to be filed in the courts in the event of an unfavorable action by the bureau.

With 30,000 cases yet to be determinded by the bureau, it is possible that thousands more will be sent into the temples of justice as soon as the unsuccessful applicant can get there. Nearly 300 suits have been filed in the District Supreme Court since July 3, 1931.

The two attorneys who handle all the veterans' cases in the courts here have never lost a case that was actually tried. In rare instances they have recommended settlements because of a deserving case, but on their court work they have yet to meet defeat.

Not the least of the troubles arising out of the District's cases is the fact that veterans now living in various parts of the United States, Philippine Islands, Hawaiian Islands, Puerto Rico, and the European countries have chosen the Federal courts here for waging their fight. Almost without exception they trace their total disability back to some incident, occurring in 1918 or 1917, which at the time was not considered serious.

Kevin-Barry Council Seeks Debate on Erin

Taking exception to statements made in articles which he wrote for the Catholic Monthly magazine on the present political situation in Ireland the Kevin-Barry Council of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic yesterday invited the Rev. John A. Ryan, D. D., of Catholic University, to meet a representative of that organization in a public debate on issues pertaining to the Irish situation.

It was pointed out that there probably were many persons in Washington who would welcome a full and complete discussion on the reasons and purposes for Mr. de Valera's refusal to pay the so-called annuities to England, and also the oath of allegiance controversy.

PARAGUAY REPORTS CAPTURE OF 2 FORTS

(Associated Press.)

Paraguayan reports of the campaign against Fort Aroe in the Chaco yesterday told of the capture by Paraguayan troops of Forts Lara and Castillo, described as vital points in the approach to the Bolivian stronghold.

The reports said that the Bolivian dead were considerable and that the Paraguayans had captured 2 captains, 2 lieutenants, 12 second lieutenants and 102 soldiers as well as 86 rifles, 24 machine guns, 75 boxes of ammunition and 108 freighters (cargadores). The Paraguayans, the reports said, renamed Fort Castillo Fort Guillermo Arias, in honor of a Paraguayan student soldier who fell in the assault.

Note Exchange Continues.

An attack on Fort Yucra in which the Paraguayans took a Vickers cannon, 3 machine guns, 130 rifles and 3 trucks was also reported.

The exchange of notes between the neutral commission and the council of the League of Nations continued yesterday when Acting President Joseph Connolly of the Irish Free State, cabled Chairman White that the council wished the neutral commission to continue to keep it informed of developments in the peace negotiations with Paraguay and Bolivia.

In a note Thursday night the neutral commission had cabled the league that the Chaco question must be handled "with much patience in order to avoid greater complications." The neutrals added the negotiations for termination of hostilities were proceeding "satisfactorily" and expressed confidence in the negotiations going on for securing acceptance of bases for final arbitration of the conflict.

Speculation on Intent.

Whether the neutral commission intended this message as a polite indication to the league that the commission was able to handle the situation without pressure from Geneva was an engaging subject yesterday for conversation in diplomatic circles.

Sources close to the neutrals, however, have insisted they wished the league's action in proposing measures which the neutrals had already taken to be considered in the light of support for the neutral commission.

The last league message, expressing "sincere hope for continued progress" was made public at the State Department almost as soon as it had arrived from Geneva.

Tailor Hurt in Struggle With Marauder in Home

John G. Wellman, 41, 1402 R street northwest, a tailor, reported to police that he was awakened at 4:30 yesterday morning by a man who ordered him to "stick 'em up." Instead of complying, Wellman said he leaped from his bed and switched on the light.

Although struck on the head with an iron instrument, he succeeded in beating off his assailant who escaped through a second-story window. He was unable to give a comprehensive description of the man. Wellman lives above his tailor shop.

Dog's Life Is Full Of Purpose, Vet Says

San Francisco (U.P.).—A dog's life is something that can be full of purpose and accomplishment.

If you don't believe it, ask Reginald D. White, blind war veteran, and he will provide the proof in his dog, Wickee.

For two years Wickee, trained by the seeing eye, has been the aid and companion of White.

"It is Wickee, really, who is the master," White said. "I do as he orders."

White insists that the dog has the intelligence of a man of 45 and the curiosity of a child of 6. Commands spoken to him in ordinary language meet instant response.

DAN BEARD ASSISTS AT GROVE PLANTING

Trees in Anacostia Park to Have Ancestry Traced to National Shrines.

After having led a contingent of Boy Scouts from Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia to Mount Vernon, where a crop of walnuts were gathered, Dan Beard, pioneer leader in the Boy Scout movement, yesterday afternoon dedicated the National Historic Grove in Anacostia Park before a large gathering of Scouts and representatives of the American Forestry Association, the Department of Agriculture, and school children.

A ten-acre tract has been set aside in Anacostia Park for the planting of trees from American shrines. Six trees planted in connection with the dedicatory exercises will be properly marked and their number augmented from year to year as others are deemed worthy of admission. The first tree planted was taken from Mount Vernon, the others were from Arlington, Francis Scott Key's home, Fort Frederick, Gettysburg Battlefield, and Winchester, Va., the scene of Washington's youth.

Similar groves are being established in many sections of the United States, and the walnuts gathered at Mount Vernon, together with seeds from other American shrines, will be distributed among these groves.

Thomas P. Littlepage, Washington lawyer and tree grower, was one of the speakers at the dedicatory exercises. Lynn C. Drake, Scout executive, presided. Perry Bradley, Roy F. Zaner, Henry Coates and Frank R. Horton, Scout executives of Baltimore, York, Frederick and Winchester, respectively, presented the trees brought by their contingents. H. E. Allanson, assistant chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, presented the Mount Vernon tree.

The National Historic Grove in Anacostia Park will be a living memorial to great Americans, and foresters declare that within fifteen years will be a beautiful and impressive sight.

TWO DELAY SAILING TO RETURN INSULL

(Associated Press).

Systematic preparations for the extradition from Greece of Samuel Insull, sr., despite the first setback, were launched here yesterday by two assistant State's attorneys from Chicago in cooperation with State Department officials.

Charles A. Bellows and Andrew Vlachos, the Chicago attorneys, arrived yesterday morning and immediately went into conference with Joseph R. Baker, extradition expert of the department.

After the conference Bellows said he and Vlachos were compelled to abandon their plan to sail for Europe next Wednesday and will remain in Washington until they get additional depositions from witnesses in the Chicago proceedings against Insull so as to have complete legal records to take to Greece.

State Department officials still decline to say what their next step in the case will be, but the care with which the records are being assembled indicates a desire to be ready to prove to the satisfaction of Greek officials that the indictments against Insull are for crimes for which refugees may be surrendered under the Greek law.

The extradition treaty negotiated betwen Greece and the United States, which it not yet effective because there has not been an exchange of ratifications, includes both larceny and embezzlement among the crimes for which refugees may be surrendered. Should this treaty be made effective within a few weeks it might simplify the procedure for Insull's extradition should other efforts fail, even though its bearing retroactively might be in question.

Neither the Illinois officials nor State Department officials seem to be apprehensive that Insull will make any immediate effort to leave Greece. Rumors from Athens that he was preparing for a trip to Turkey are not credited in Washington official circles.

U. S. Defied by Insull In Seizure of Passport

Athens, Greece, Oct. 15 (U.P.).—Samuel Insull, fugitive Chicago utilities operator, openly defied the United States Government today in its efforts to obtain his return for trial on charges of embezzlement.

"I will ignore any further passport demands," Insull said, referring to the unsuccessful efforts of the United States consulate to take up his passport. "I am in good health. I took a walk this morning and this afternoon and am absolutely tranquil." The legation and the foreign office denied erroneous rumors that the consul had asked Greek authorities to detain Insull and seize his passport.

Kicking Cow Causes Suit.

Clinton, Ill. (U.P.).—Claiming that he was "injured and humiliated" by being kicked by a cow while attending a live stock sale being held by Clarence Crang, Louis N. Richey has filed suit for $10,000 damages against Crang.

DR. LIANG ANALYZES MANCHURIAN REPORT

Says China Will Accept View of Lytton Commission in Principle.

A graphic picture of the activity of the Lytton commission was presented and the consequences of the Lytton report were predicted by Dr. Yuen-Li Liang, formerly judge of the court of appeals at Shanghai, technical delegates to the League of Nations assembly in 1929, and professor of international law at the Comparative Law School of China, at Shanghai, in a radio address delivered here last night and broadcast through the Columbia nation-wide network.

Dr. Liang has just been commissioned to preceed to Geneva immediaately to be one of China's pleaders before the special assembly of the league, opening November 14, which will consider the report as submitted by the league commission.

After emphasizing that it was Japan who proposed the sending of the Lytton commission, Dr. Liang compared the commission to a referee in school games, saying "The Japanese have been proverbially known as a very chivalrous people. The league commission was inaugurated at the instance of Japan. Although the members of the commission were not selected by the Japanese government, it is not too much to expect that the latter has had and will have a reasonable amount of confidence in international officials, particularly as one of the distinguished sons of Japan at this time is not only sitting in the permanent court of international justice at the Hague but is serving as its powerful president.

"Dr. Liang then summarized the content of the report and stated that the proposed settlement of the commission had been anticipated by an influential body of Chinese political opinion. Last year Wang Ching-Wu and Eugene Chen, leaders in the Chinese Nationalist movement, suggested the creation of a special civilian administration for Manchuria which was to be internationally demilitarized. This plan did not come through.

"Predicting the attitude of the Chinese government, Dr. Liang said, unofficially, that the Chinese government would espouse in principle the report because China had been imploring time and again for a peaceful settlement of the whole question. He doubted, however, whether direct negotiation between Japan and China without and participation of mutual observers would be welcomed in China.

REICH REFUSAL HELD AFFRONT TO FRANCE

Berlin Opposes Preliminary Four-Power Arms Parley Near League Home.

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Characterizing Germany's refusal to take part in a preliminary four-power arms conference at Geneva as an affront both to France and to the League of Nations, a government spokesman indicated today that France was unlikely to agree to hold the meeting in any other city.

The selection of Geneva was made when Premier Edouard Herriot saw Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald earlier this week in London. Italy, the fourth power that would participate in the meeting, agreed with the French and British that Geneva be the place for the conference.

The French spokesman expressed satisfaction that the British "apparently realize now the real portent of Germany's demand for equality in armaments, namely, complete rearmament and creation of a new army."

The newspaper Le Temps urged that the powers proceed with the Geneva meeting despite Germany's attitude. The military position of the Reich, the paper argued, is fixed by treaty anyway.

Berlin, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The German government declared in a communique today that the attempt to hold a four-power parley at Geneva within the framework of the League of Nations is "contrary to common sense."

Soldier of Fortune Restless for Action

El Paso, Tex. (U.P.).—Tracy Richardson, famous soldier of fortune, who declares he used to earn as high as $250 a day for his work as a machine gunner, for mowing down Latin-American soldiers during revolutions, would like to see a return of the "good old days."

"Now," he says, "when trouble bobs up a first-class gunner only gets $10 to $15 a day for his work."

But, even so, Richardson expressed a desire to get back in the "harness" again. During the World War he was a major and a flier, in addition to being a machine gun expert.

DRY NOMINEE RAPS REDISTRICTING LAW

McWane Suspects Assembly Passed Invalid Act Through Wet Plot.

Bedford, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Sharp criticism was directed at the Virginia General Assembly in an address delivered here last night by Fred W. McWane, Lynchburg dry Republican candidate for Congress, for the passage of the redistricting act just declared unconstitutional by the State court of appeals.

Mr. McWane asserted that "the good name of Virginia has been sullied" by the act and declared that the only way to "rectify the error" would be the election of Republican candidates.

"Virginians turned against England, the birthplace of many of them, when their king proved a tryant," Mr. McWane said. "Virginia seceded from the Union, a condition it was foremost in making, and it did not want to dissolve it, when the Union imposed conditions it considered unjust—and Virginians, if they are true to history and true to the blood of their noble sires, will turn against the party and its system that would make of her a national joke and create within her boundaries a monstrosity that smacks of tyranny itself."

Mr. McWane said Gov. Pollard's defense that he did not sign the redistricting bill is a "pitiful spectacle," since the governor allowed the bill to become law through failure to veto it.

"I can not help but wonder if/the campaign that started in 1918 to some day repeal the eighteenth amendment can be represented in today's confusion as to the redistricting act," Mr. McWane said. "I can not help but speculate on whether or not the legislators who created this monstrosity that was so evidently a fraud that the courts had to throw it out, were not innocent victims in this instance of an insidious scheme to work out the plan of the liquor interests. As the matter now stands nine Democratic congressmen may be elected, all of whom stand on the Democratic platform and are pledged to the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Is that just an accident or was it planned?"

Man's Trousers and $8 Taken by Armed Gang

Maybe it was meanness and maybe it was to block pursuit, but four colored men who held up William Davis, of Washington, yesterday at Riverdale, took his trousers as well as $8.

Davis told police he was riding on a flat-car on a train when the four approached him. Two of them menaced him with guns, another hit him with a blackjack and the remaining one took his money and his pants. A charitable neighbor provided him with clothing and he came on home.

PIONEER MAIL FLIER ENDS LONG CAREER

Verne Treat Retires at 39 After 6,000 Air Hours; Will Sell Autos.

Verne Treat never hopped across the Atlantic, but the distance he has flown with the night airmail between New York, Washington and Richmond, would take him twenty times around the world.

It was farewell to wings yesterday for Treat, who is the dean of night mail flyers in the East. He closed his career when he brought the New York mail in at Richmond yesterday morning.

At the age of 39, Treat, who has come through twenty crackups and two parachute jumps without a scratch, is retiring. He believes he is too old for the strenuous task of flying the mail through the storms of another winter.

He will settle down to the peace and quiet of a life as part owner of an automobile sales agency in Freehold, N. J.

Treat began his aviation career as a "wing walker," appearing at fairs and carnivals. During the World War he was a military flyer. Later he flew with the Curtiss organization.

His hours of flying total 6,000. He has pushed the mail 500,000 miles. He made the first flight when the night mail was inaugurated between Washington and New York—May 1, 1928.

In his many crashes he has always escaped uninjured, although in some instances he climbed out of a plane smashed to bits.

CAPT. CALHOUN HELD BY JURY IN FATALITY

$1,500 Bond Fixed in Death of Shipping Board Official in Wreck.

Capt. Clarence C. Calhoun, well-known attorney, of Chevy Chase, Md., was held for action of the grand jury on $1,500 bond yesterday following a coroner's inquest into the accident Thursday when an automobile he was driving collided with one operated by Henry C. Littlefield, chief of the educational division of the Bureau of Research, United States Shipping Board, causing the latter's death.

Also investigating the death of Mrs. Lucille Forness, 43 years old, a mother of eight children, who was struck and killed by an unknown autoist two weeks ago, the coroner's jury attributed this fatality to a hit-and-run driver.

The collision in which Mr. Littlefield was killed occurred at Tenth street and Pennsylvania avenue. Mr. Littlefield was hurled from his machine, receiving a fracture of the skull and severe lacerations and bruises. Capt. Calhoun was driving to the corner stone laying at the new Supreme Court Building.

Mrs. Forness, who was 43 years old, was found in the gutter on Nebraska avenue near Wisconsin avenue. She was beyond medical aid and died soon after being admitted to Georgetown Hospital. No clew to the identity of the driver has been found.

CARILLON DEDICATED AT RICHMOND RITES

Crowd of 15,000 Is Present; Senator Barkley Praises World War Dead.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The music of carillon bells high up in the "singing tower" floated above Richmond today while thousands listened at exercises dedicating Virginia's memorial to her 90,000 World War heroes.

Through the crisp Otcober air, the melodious bells, struck by Anton Brees, Flemish-American carilloneur, sounded a benediction to the impressive exercises that were featured by an address by Senator Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky.

"It is a beautiful thing you have done here in Virginia," he said, "to erect a tower of perpetual music in perpetual honor of the undying fame of America's troops."

Dr. Beverly D. Tucker, of Richmond, a former Army chaplain, dedicated the carillon with the prayer that the bells might "ring out the thousand wars of old, ring in the thousand years of peace."

Wreaths Are Placed.

The thousands of spectators, bareheaded, bowed in reverent silence and after a minute, joined in the Lord's prayer. The bells played Chopin's funeral march as wreaths were placed at the base of the tower by various organizations.

Diplomatic representatives of fourteen nations that served with America in the World War were seated behind the speaker, while to the right, World War mothers, some of them wearing gold stars, were given a place of honor. The War Memorial Commission, which planned the celebration, and prominent members of the General Assembly were seated on the platform.

Blending his praise of American courage and fortitude in the struggle that ended fourteen years ago with a plea that the nations of the earth might be bonded together by ties of universal brotherhood, Senator Barkley said that "while these heroes did not begin the war, they helped gloriously to end it."

"They helped," he said, "to bring it to such a conclusion as to justify the hope that no such visitation will ever again depress the human soul or snuff out the spark of life. They helped to end it not only for the glory and honor of the American flag, but for the glory and honor of all flags wherever in all the world they flutter in an atmosphere of liberty, equality, fraternity and justice.

"Wounds Rapidly Healing."

"The wounds of that great conflict are rapidly healing. The anguish of bitterness is being soothed. We are beginning to recognize that even our enemies of a decade and a half ago may become our fast friends in peace and comity."

In the semicircular concourse, flanked by trees of autumnal hues of russet, gold and red, a crowd estimated at 15,000 persons heard the Rev. Ben. R. Lacy, jr., D. D., of Richmond, pronounce the invocation. Capt. Bolling R. Handy, chairman of the Memorial Commission, called the assembly to order, and Lieut. Gov. James H. Price, who represented Gov. Pollard, presented the dedication speaker.

Distinguished guests headed the parade that formed at Capital Square and marched to the carillon site. In the line of march were representatives of several historic Virginia units, including the Monticello Guards and the Richmond Blues. The V. P. I. cadets and the V. M. I. representation, both smartly arrayed, drew applause from the holiday crowd that lined the streets.

Later Reaves told Judge J. Chew Sheriff he wanted to withdraw his plea and take the blame for the still, which was found near his home. Judge Sheriff agreed, and charges against the other men were dropped.

RALLY IN ANNAPOLIS LARGELY ATTENDED

Senator Tydings and Other Democratic Candidates Denounce G. O. P.

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 15.—President Hoover's administration was arraigned at a mass meeting of Democrats of Annapolis and Anne Arundel County, held in the House of Delegates at the Statehouse tonight.

The speakers were Senator Millard E. Tydings, and Representative Stephan W. Gambrill, of the Fifth Maryland District, both candidates for reelection. It was one of the largest political gatherings held here in years, the floor, as well as the galleries of the chamber being crowded.

Gov. Ritchie was listed for the principal address but he was prevented by reason of a heavy cold contracted a few days ago, which he is nursing along carefully, in view of a series of speeches he is to deliver in Chicago, including a debate on national issues.

Senator Tydings denounced President Hoover as a false prophet, and characterized his policies as completely unsound. He made a plea for Republicans to join the Democrats at the coming election, as the only solution to the distress and complexity of problems that confront the country.

Representative Gambrill, long popular among voters here, was given a big ovation. He, too, flayed the national administration under Hoover and pleaded for Democratic success.

Benjamin Michaelson, counsel to the board of county commissioners, presided.

FORESTER REMOVAL ORDER IS PROMISED

Carson Says He Will Not Share With Governor Judgment on Jones.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—William E. Carson, of the State conservation and development commission, announced tonight that he will forward to the governor "in due course" an order for the removal of State Forester Chapin Jones.

At the same time Mr. Carson announced that he would not accept the proposal of Murray McGuire, counsel for Jones, who had suggested that the commission chairman sit with the governor in reviewing the case.

"I can conceive of no situation," Mr. Carson said, "which would require or justify my sitting with the governor at the hearings at which he will be called upon to review the action taken by the commission and by me as its chairman."

Mr. Carson said his order of dismissal and recommendations for a reorganization of the forestry service probably would reach the governor within the next 30 or 60 days. Meanwhile, he expressed the hope that the former forester would reconsider his decision and agree to accept some subordinate post in the service where his technical and scientific knowledge might be utilized by the State.

Stressing the executive and administrative duties of the State forester, Mr. Carson said that for some time, "and more especially since the series of disastrous fires that swept the forests of Virginia during the drought of 1930 and 1931," he had had in mind a change in the organization of the forestry service.

Janitor Forfeits $10 In Newspaper Theft

Seen by a newspaper route agent as he took a paper from an honor rack, William Ray, colored, yesterday forfeited $10 in Police Court. Ray locked himself in the storeroom of the apartment house where he is janitor and refused to appear until the owner of the building ordered him to open the door.

The storeroom was sought as a refuge when the rack inspector attempted to question him about taking the paper.

TEXT OF PRESIDENT HOOVER'S SPEECH GIVEN IN CLEVELAND

DEPRESSION TRACED TO EUROPEAN CHAOS

Heavy Armaments Also Get Share of Blame as Basis of World's Woes.

I spoke at Des Moines about agriculture. My remarks this evening will be largely directed to employment and to the wage and salary earners. I propose to review what the administration has done and the measures and policies it has in action together with the relation of these policies to those of our opponents. As President of the United States, I have the duty to speak to workers, but I have also a certain personal right to speak.

When I talk to you tonight about labor I speak not out of academic imaginings but from sharp personal experience. I have looked at these human problems, not only from the fireside of one who has returned from a day's work with his own hands but I know the problem that haunts the employer through the night, desperate to find the money with which to meet the week's pay roll. In public service during years past I have had to look at these problems from the point of view of the national welfare as a whole.

The people of a free nation have a right to ask their Government, "why has our employment been interrupted?" What measures have been taken in our protection? What has been done to remove the obstacles from the return of our work to us?" They not only have a right to ask these questions but to have an answer. I am here tonight to give that answer.

Depression Affects All Branches Alike.

During the past three years our economic system has received the most terrific shock and dislocation which, had not strong action been taken by your Government, would have imperiled the republic and the whole hope of recovery. It has affected business, industry, employment and agriculture alike. It is appropriate to repeat that while many of our measures are directed to the protection and assistance of particular groups, yet all are in the same boat and all must come to shore together. And how are they to get to shore? By listening to those who manifestly display a lack of knowledge of the character of the storm and of the primary problems of navigation? By boring holes in the bottom of the boat? By throwing overboard the measures designed to meet the storm and which are proving their effectiveness?

Our opponents have been going up and down the land repeating the statement that the sole or major origins of this disruption and this world-wide hurricane came from the United States through the wild flotation of securities and the stock market speculation in New York three years ago, together with the passage of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, which took place nine months after the storm broke.

I propose to discuss this assertion.

First—Because it can be proved absolutely untrue.

Second—Because the United States did not bring this calamity upon the world. The United States is not the oppressor of the world.

Third—Because it can be demonstrated to be founded upon a complete misunderstanding of what has happened in the world.

Fourth—Because any party which exhibits such a lack of economic understanding upon which to base national policies should not be trusted with the fate of 25,000,000 American families. They should not be trusted to command the battle against the most gigantic economic emergency with which our people have ever been confronted, and to bring that battle to victorious issue in the reestablishment of the functioning of our economic machine.

The thesis of the opposition as to the origin of our troubles is a wonderful explanation for political purposes. I would be glad, indeed, if all the enormous problems in the world could be simplified in such a fashion. If that were all that has been the matter with us, we could have recovered from this depression two years ago instead of fighting ever since that time against the most destructive forces which we have ever met in the whole history of the United States—and I am glad to say fighting victoriously.

Ills Traced to Vast Cost of World War.

Nowhere do I find the slightest reference in all the statements of the opposition party to the part played by the greatest war in history, the inheritances from it, the fears and panics and dreadful economic catastrophies which have developed from these causes in foreign countries, or the idea that they may have had the remotest thing to do with the calamity against which this administration is fighting day and night.

The leaders of the Democratic party appear to be entirely in ignorance of the effect of the killing or incapacitating of 40,000,000 of the best youth of the earth, or of the stupendous cost of war—a sum of $300,000,000,000, or a sum nearly equal to the value of all the property in the United States, or the stupendous inheritance of debt, with its consequent burden of taxes on scores of nations, with their stifling effect upon recuperation of industry and commerce or paralyzing effect upon world commerce by the continued instability of currencies and budgets.

Democratic leaders have apparently not yet learned of the political instability that arose all over Europe from the harsh treaties which ended the war and the constant continuing political agitation and creation of fear which from time to time paralyzed confidence. They have apparently never head of the continuing economic dislocation from the transfer on every frontier of great masses of people from their former economic setting.

They apparently have not heard of the continuing dislocation of the stream of economic life which has been caused by the carving of twelve new nations from three old empires. These nations have a rightful aspiration to build their own separate economic systems; they naturally have surrounded themselves with tariffs and other national protections and have thereby diverted the long-established currents of trade. I presume, however, that if our Democratic leaders should hear of these nine new tariff walls introduced into the world some fourteen years ago, they would lay them at the door of the Smoot-Hawley bill passed twelve years later.

Thep apparently have not heard of the increase of standing armies of the world from two to five million men, with consequent burdens upon the taxpayer and the constant threat to the peace of the world.

The Democratic leaders apparently have never heard that there has been gigantic overproduction of rubber in the Indies, of sugar in Cuba, of coffee in Brazil, of cocoa in Ecuador, of copper in the Congo, of lead in Burma, overproduction of zinc in Australia, overproduction of oil from new discoveries in the United States, Russia, Sumatra, and Venezuela; and likewise the effect of the introduction into the world of gigantic areas of new wheatlands in the Argentine and in Canada; new cotton lands in Egypt. In each and every case these enormous overproductions, far beyond consumption even in boom times, have crashed into the immutable law of supply and demand and brought inevitable collapse in prices and with it a train of bankruptcies and destruction of buying power for American goods.

They appear not to recognize that these forces finally generated economic strangulations, fears, and panic, the streams of which precipitated another long series of world-wide disasters.

The Democratic leaders apparently never heard that there followed revolutions in Spain and Portugal, Brazil, the Argentine, Chile, Peru, Ecuador, Siam, with attempts at revolution in a dozen other countries, resulting in their partial or practical repudiation of debt and the constant decrease in buying power for our goods.

They seem not to know that the further accumulation of all these causes and dislocations finally placed a strain upon the weakened economic systems of Europe until one by one they collapsed in failure of their gold standards and the partial or total repudiation of debts. They would hold the American people ignorant that every one of these nations in their financial crises imposed direct or indirect restrictions on the import of goods in order to reduce expenditures of their people. They call these "reprisals" against the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill.

Dumping of Foreign Securities in America.

They apparently have never heard of the succeeding jeopardy in which our Nation was put through these destructions of world commerce, or the persistent dumping of securities into the American market from these panic-stricken countries; the gigantic drains upon our gold and exchange; or the consequent fear that swept over our people, causing them to draw from our bank resources $1,500,000,000, all of which contracted credit, resulted in demand for payment of debts right and left, and thwarted our every effort for industrial recovery.

Yet in the face of all these tremendous facts, our Democratic friends leave the impression with the American people that the prime cause of this disaster was the boom in flotations and stock prices and a small increase in American tariffs.

Such an impression in unquestionably sought by the Democrtic candidate when he says:

"That bubble burst first in the land of its origin—the United States. The major collapes abroad followed. It was not simultaneous with ours."

I do not underrate the distressing losses to millions of our people or the weakening of our strength from the mania of speculation and flotation of securities, but I may incidentally remark that the State governments have the primary responsibility to protect their citizens in these matters and that the vast majority of such transactions originated or took place in the State of New York.

But as to the accuracy of the statement I have quoted I may call your attention to a recent bulletin of the highly respected National Bureau of Economic Research, in which it is shown that this depression in the world began in eleven countries, having a population of 600,000,000 people, before it even appeared in our country, instead of the bubble having "first burst in the United States." Their report shows that the depression in eight other countries, with a population of another 600,000,000 people, started at the same time with ours. In fact, the shocks from the continued economic earthquakes in these other countries carried our prices far below the values they would otherwise have sunk to, with all its train of greatly increased losses, perils, and unemployment.

Our opponents demand to know why the governmental leaders or business men over the world did not foresee the approach of these disintegrating forces. That answer is simple. The whole world was striving to overcome them, but finally they accumulated until certain countries could no longer stand the strain, and their people, suddenly overtaken by fear and panic, through hoarding and exporting their capital for safety, brought down their own houses and these disasters spread like a prairie fire through the world. No man can foresee the coming fear or panic, or the extent of its effect. I did not notice any Democratic Jeremiahs.

Democrats Are Quoted On Tariff Question.

So much for the beginnings and forces moving in this calamity.

I now come to the amazing statements that the tariff bill of 1930 has borne a major influence in this debacle.

I quote from the Democratic candidate.

"It has destroyed international commerce."

"The tariff has done so much to destroy foreign trade as to make foreign trade virtually impossible."

I shall analyze the accuracy of these statements not only because I should like to get before my countrymen a picture of the lack of understanding which the Democratic party has of world trade, but also for the further reason that it is of vital importance to labor that, as our opponents have this obsession, it means that if they are intrusted with control of our Government, they intend to break down the protective tariff which is the very first line of defense of the American standard of living against these new forces.

It requires a collection of dull facts to demonstrate the errors in these bald assertions by Democratic leaders.

At the beginning I may repeat that this tariff bill was not passed until nine months after the economic depression began in the United States and also not until twenty other countries had already gone into the depression.

The Democratic party seldom mentions that 66 per cent of our imports are free of duty, but that is the fact. From half to two-thirds of the trade of the world is in nondutiable goods—that is, mostly raw materials; another part is in luxuries, upon which all nations collect tariffs for revenue; another part, and probably less than one-third of the whole, is in competitive goods so far as the importing nation is concerned and therefore subject to protective tariffs.

The trade of the world has distressingly diminished under the impact of these successive dislocations abroad. But the decrease is almost exactly the same in the free goods everywhere as in the duitable goods. That is the case in the United States. If the Smoot-Hawley tariff reduced our imports of dutiable goods, what was it that reduced the two-thirds of nondutiable goods?

If we explore a little further, we would find from the Tariff Commission that the total duties collected in a comparable year represent 16 per cent of the total imports, this being an increase from 13.8 per cent of the previous tariffs. In other words, the effect of the new tariff shows an increase of 2.2 per cent. This is the margin with which they say we have pulled down foreign governments, created tyrannies, financial shocks, and revolutions.

I may mention that upon the same basis the McKinley duties were 23 per cent; the Dingley duties were 25.8 per cent; the Payne-Aldrich duties were 19.3 per cent of the whole of our imports—all compared with the 16 per cent of the present tariff—and yet they produced in foreign countries no revolutions, no financial crises, and did not destroy the whole world, nor destroy American foreign trade.

Duties Are Levied Only On One-Third of Imports.

And I may explore the facts still further. The five-year average of the import trade of the United States before the depression was about 12 per cent of the whole world import trade. Thus they would say that 2.2 per cent increase applied to one-eighth of the world's imports has produced this catastrophe.

I can explore this in still another direction. I remind you that we levy tariffs upon only one-third of our imports. I also remind you that the actual increases made in the Smoot-Hawley act covered only one-quarter of the dutiable imports. I may also remind you that our import trade is only one-eighth of the import trade of the world. So they would have us believe this world catastrophe and this destruction of foreign trade happened because the United States increased tariffs on one-fourth of one-third of one-eighth of the world's imports. Thus we pulled down the world, so they tell us, by increases on less than 1 per cent of the goods being imported by the world.

And I may explore the responsibility of the tariffs still further. My opponent has said that it—

"Started such a drain on the gold reserves of the principal countries as to force practically all of them off the gold standard."

At Des Moines I defended the American people from this guilt. I pointed out that it happens there had been no drain of gold from Europe, which is the center of this disturbance, but, on the contrary, that Europe's gold holdings have increased every year since the Smoot-Hawley tariff was passed.

My fellow citizens, I could continue for hours in an analysis of mistaken statements and misinformation from the opposition. But I assure you that this country is not to blame for the catastrophes that have come on the world. The American people did not originate the age-old controversies of Europe. We did not inaugurate the Great War or the panics in Europe.

No, my friends, the increase of duties collected by the United States by 2.2 per cent calculated on all the goods we import did not bring about the debacle in the world. If every country in the world were to increase the duty upon their imports by 2.2 per cent tomorrow, but if at the same time they would also adopt domestic policies which would bring about release of the energies and progress of their people—if they would maintain peace and good will toward their neighbors—if they would support confidence in the world, then the world's, as well as our own, international commerce would thrive and boom beyond any dimensions that we ever dreamed of.

I dwell on this point, not only because I believe it is important to correct current misstatements of our opponents but because the policies of our opponents are founded upon misconceptions of the utmost gravity for the future of the United States. If it were not a matter of such utter gravity for the future of the United States, I should treat them not in a sense of seriousness but in a sense of humor.

Asserts Democrats Lack Penetration Into Dangers.

There is a vital determination before the American people as to whether there shall be placed in power over the destinies of 120,000,000 of people a party which so lacks a penetration into the forces active in the world and the dangers and responsibilities that arise from them.

I now wish to examine the record and policies of the present administration in their relation to our wage and salary earners, for that record is made. There are twelve major measures and policies which we have put into action. They speak louder than any promises.

1. My first concern in dealing with the problems of these times, while fighting to save our people from chaos and to restore order in our economic life, has been to avert hunger or cold among those upon whom these blows have fallen with heart-breaking severity—that is the unemployed workers.

In the fall, 1931, we mobilized again, through cooperation with governors and local communities, all the associations and agencies in the United States and carried a victorious battle over the winter 1931-32.

National Relief Groups Recently Remobilized.

Still again during the past few weeks, I have cooperated with the great national agencies in the remobilization of the voluntary forces of the country for an attack on the forthcoming winter.

But fearing that the resources of individuals of the local communities and States were being exhausted, I settled with the Congress an authority to be given to the Reconstruction Corporation to loan a total of $300,000,000 to those States whose needs might be found greater than the voluntary associations and local authorities could provide. I had great difficulties with Democratic leaders to prevent this being made a pork-barrel operation rather than based upon need. Under that authority many millions have already been provided. We have provided, in addition, large quantities of wheat and cotton for their aid. There should be no fear or apprehension at any deserving American fireside that starvation or cold will creep within their doors to menace families and loved ones over the forthcoming winter.

With these three years of unceasing effort in relief and by the patriotic service of our citizens and local communities and public officials, the stimulus and mobilization that we have been able to give through the use of the presidential office, we present to the world a record unparalleled in any other nation. That is a record expressed in technical terms yet interpretable in sheer human sympathy. That record is the information furnished to me constantly by the surgeon general of the Public Health Service, which shows, down to this latest moment, that the adult mortality, infant mortality are at the lowest rate on record, and the general health of the American people is at a higher level today than ever before in the history of our country. I know that there are exceptions and that there is suffering which always arises in communities where their organization is less efficient than it should be.

Even so, no such record could be established if the Nation's unemployed were starving and without shelter. Yet some say that things could not be worse. Had these actions not been taken they would be a thousand times worse.

2. In November, 1929, I assembled in Washington representatives of the leading employers, together with representatives of organized labor, and here we developed certain plans for dealing with this emergency. I believe this can be truly said to have been the first time in history that the Government has taken the leadership in securing an understanding between industry and labor of the complete mutuality of their interest in the face of national danger.

Standard of Buying Power Is Maintained.

We worked out on that occasion many purposes.

The first was to uphold the standards of real wages, the second was to uphold the buying power of our working people until the cost of living had diminished. The third was to prevent that thing which had happened in every previous depression in our history, and that was an immediate attack upon wages as a basis of maintaining profit. This proposal had the sympathetic support of the employers of the country and for nearly two years they maintained the standard of wages in the United States. They maintained them in the face of disappearing profits. As the depression grew more severe there have been readjustments, but these readjustments have come about by agreement between employer and employe after profits were exhausted and the cost of living had been reduced. As a result of these efforts we have had the astonishing spectacle of a country in which there have been less strikes and industrial conflict, with all their bitterness, than even in normal times. The fourth of these undertakings made on this occasion was that the employers faced with the necessity for reduced staffs would stagger their employment instead of discharging a portion of workers into complete disaster, they would spread the remaining employment over the whole of their employes.

That has been done on a wide scale in the manufacturing industries, and millions have continued with some income who otherwise would have been destitute. At a later date I secured the establishment of a definite organization which has been engaged for many months in the conduct of a campaign throughout the country for the adaption of these principles to office and service institutions. This has already resulted in much expansion of employment and relief of distress in those occupations.

The fifth of the undertakings made in 1929 was that manufacturers, railroads and utilities would expand their construction of new equipment beyond their present needs in order to maintain employment to the utmost of their capacity. A vast sum of money was expended in these directions during the first year of the depression. Some months ago I secured the interest of employers in organization of a new campaign to replace obsolete equipment and machinery. This also will result in expansion of employment. As I have said, when history records this depression, it will record no brighter chapter in the whole history of the United States than the approach to this problem by both employers and leaders of labor in humanity and a sense of social responsibility. To them I pay high tribute. In the face of these actions and these results, let no man say that it could not be worse. If it had not been for these actions, this country would have been fired with the flames of bitterness and conflict between workers and employers. Millions more would have been without jobs, wages would have been reduced far below their present levels.

3—Day before yesterday my opponent announced a plan "to set up in times of prosperity what might be called a nest-egg to be used for public works in time of depression." He says "that is, a policy which we should initiate when we get back to good times." He advances this apparently as a brand new idea. Now it will doubtless surprise him to learn that the eggs have not only been laid, but have hatched.

He either ignores or is ignorant of the fact that as far back as 1922, in our unemployment conference of that year under my chairmanship we developed the idea of making use of public works to assist in the stabilization of employments in times of depression, and laid the foundation for its operation.

Upon the breaking out of this depression in November three years ago, I announced that not only would the Federal Government speed up its public works, but I requested the States and municipalities to do likewise. During the year 1930, we not only maintained these types of construction work, but stimulated it to above normal, to an amount of $500,000,000 to $800,000,000. The wide extent and pressure of the depression, however, rapidly cut into the construction work of many States and municipalities. We, however, have held Federal construction work up to three times its normal. By the end of this fiscal year we will have expended nearly $2,400,000,000 of Federal money on construction and maintenance work since the depression began. Do you not think things could have been worse if these policies had not been adopted?

There has proved to be a limitation, however, on this, and that limitation is that the Federal Government should not and must not undertake projects which are not of productive value to the community and must not extend its liabilities beyond its ability to maintain a balanced budget. To take money from the taxpayers and thus decrease his ability to employ people himself, and to put into public works which will never make a real return to the public, is a waste of national wealth and an actual destruction to employment.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Federal Government was carrying a burden of $700,000,000 of public works per annum—the utmost that its resources permitted—the Democratic vice presidential candidate introduced, in May of this year, and secured the passage of a bill in the Democratic House of Representatives calling for $1,200,000,000 more of public works. The expenditure of these sums meant unbalancing the budget, it meant the destruction of governmental credit.

But far worse than this the works upon which it was intended to expend this money were of typical pork-barrel character. In that bill were 3,500 different projects scattered in every community in the country. One list alone would have imposed a maintenance charge on the Government of $15,000,000 a year as against a perfectly efficient service now costing $3,000,000 a year. Lists of the projects in different congressional districts were distributed in the hope that they would appeal to the cupidity of those districts and that I would be forced into the embarrassment not only of appearing to oppose my own policy of speeding up public works, but of depriving thousands of towns and villages of the expenditure of Federal money and myself of votes in this election.

It is a good thing to have a fire in the grate to warm the house, but it is a bad thing to set the house on fire in order to warm your hand.

Pledges More Opposition To Pork Barrel Bills.

The Democratic candidate for Vice President still advocates the bill. He proposes to introduce it again in the next session. He proposes it as a part of the policies of the Democratic party. But, with the responsibility of the President of the United States, I propose to continue my opposition to it.

4. Eight months ago I requested certain of the engineering associations to investigate the possibilities of aid from the Government by ways of loans to stimulate construction of public and private works of reproductive character, that is, works that would earn repayment of capital and interest but that were halted from the lack of credit. As a result of the ventilation of these ideas the Reconstruction Corporation was authorized to make such loans up to $1,500,000,000 for such works.

Already the corporation has authorized the starting of works, the ultimate cost of which will exceed $400,000,000. The installation of these works will be productive in living for literally thousands of families.

5. It is obvious that, in addition to the great dislocations which we had received by the demoralization of governments and markets abroad, there was also another economic force moving for which there must be a remedy. That was the so-called technological unemployment. In plain terms, our inventions of labor-saving machinery have outrun our discoveries of new commodities and new services upon which to absorb the men thus discharged from the older industries. In order to bring the Government into line with these facts, upon my recommendation to Congress the shorter hours were applied effectually to Government service in order that we should spread Government employment over the largest possible numbers and yet decrease Government expenses.

6. There is an agency of protection which we have created which has been near to my heart over many years. That has been the establishment of better opportunity for our people to purchase their own homes and to have a chance to keep them when they have undertaken this great step in life. In November of last year I propounded a plan for a national system of home loan banks. These banks were for the purpose, with the temporary assistance of the Government, of mobilizing the resources of building loans, savings banks and other institutions devoted to home ownership to enable them to borrow collectively on more favorable terms from the investor, and to assure to the borrower long-term payments at more reasonable rates. The literally thousands of heart-breaking instances of inability of working people to attain renewal of expiring mortgages on favorable terms, with the consequent loss of their homes, have been one of the tragedies of this depression. Had the Democratic House of Representatives acted upon this measure at the time of its recommendation, we would have saved hundreds of thousands of these tragedies.

I finally secured the passage of that bill through the Congress. Those banks will be operating by the end of this month. The system is not as perfect as I should wish, yet it has already had one immensely beneficial effect, and there will be others. The anticipation of its aid has largely stopped foreclosing on homes, and with its operation it should enable every man who wants to make a fight to hold on to his home an opportunity to do so.

Cites Friendship to High Wages of Many Years.

And there is another purpose in setting up this new institution. Despite the tendency of the people in some communities to huddle in depression, and therefore to create many vacant dwellings, yet there are other communities where people today wish to build homes but can not do so because they can not borrow a portion of the cost. These institutions by furnishing this capital will give renewed employment to many thousands of people.

7. I have for many years advocated high wages as the economic basis for the country That is the road to economical production and high consumption of products of the farm and factory.

Those who say that things could not be worse speak without knowledge of what has happened in other countries which have gone through this cataclysm. In order to show you what the rates of wages are in the United States compared with other countries I have this week secured through the Department of Commerce a calculation on a basis which I have used before for purposes of illustration. The actual wages in terms of the currencies of other countries are difficult to compare. We must find a common denominator.

If we say that 5 per cent of butter and 95 per cent of flour form the basis of that useful mixture called "bread and butter," then the weekly earnings in each country would buy at retail in those countries the following totals of this useful compound:

Weekly wages if applied to the purchase of "composite pounds of bread and butter" as of October, 1932.

8—I wish for a moment to return to the tariff. There is no measure in the whole economic gamut more vital to the American workingman and the farmer today than the maintenance of a protective tariff. I stand on that principle of protection. Our opponents are opposed to that principle. They propose "a competitive tariff for revenue." They propose to do this in the face of the fact that in the last year currencies of competing nations have depreciated by going off the gold standard and consequently wages have been lowered in 30 competing countries. This is a flat issue which every farmer and workman in the United States should consider from the point of view of his home and his living.

Tariff Is Declared Protector of Laborer.

That it is the intention of the Democratic candidate to reduce the tariffs—on all commodities—must be clear from these typical expressions in respect to the present tariff used in this campaign—"wicked and exorbitant tariff," "its outrageous rates," "almost prohibitive tariffs," "the notorious and indefensible Smoot-Hawley tariff," "the excessive rates of that bill must come down," "until the tariff is lowered," "our policy calls for lower tariffs."

Do you want to compete with laborers whose wages in his own money are only sufficient to buy from one-eighth to one-third of the amount of bread and butter which you can buy at the present rates of wages? That is a plain question. It does not require a great deal of ingenious argument to support its correct answer. It is true we have the most gigantic market in the world today, surrounded by nations clamoring to get in. But it has been my belief—and it is still my belief—that we should protect this market for our own labor; not surrender it to the labor of foreign countries as the Democratic party proposes to do.

9. In order to hold the jobs we have for our own people and to prevent further additions to our unemployed and thus prevent further burdens upon our communities, I have by administrative order practically prohibited all immigration from every quarter of the glob except the relatives of our residents. It has reduced the numbers of people coming into the United States seeking employment to less than those who are departing. That order was issued two years ago. Had the net immigration taken place since the date of that order which took place in the two years previous, we would have had 400,000 jobs taken from our people or had just that many persons added to our unemployed. That might have been worse.

10. There is nothing in which the American workman is more concerned than in preserving the integrity of the American dollar. The Democratic party has at various times, and specifically by the passage of the Patman bill by the Democratic House of Representatives on June 15 last, endeavored to undermine the integrity of the American currency through the issue of $2,300,000,000 of greenbacks—harking back to the disastrous experience of 60 years ago. If any of you will study what happened in Germany, or France, or Austria, or any other European country when they resorted to these measures in order to meet their immediate difficulties, you will find that the major hardship fell upon the working people. There was a time when the value of the German mark was five to the dollar. They tried this plan of relief. I have in my desk a five-million-mark note which before the entrance into these processes would have been worth $1,000,000, and yet which I bought for actualy $1. The effect of their experiment was a subtle and steady reduction of real wages, right and left.

We have fought a great battle to maintain the stability of the American dollar, the stability of its exchange, in order that we might protect the working people of the United States.

Restoration of Jobs Most Vital Problem.

11. Over and above and of infinitely more importance than all these measures I have mentioned is the problem of restoring the great mass of normal jobs in the country. Emergency jobs have helped enormously, but the normal jobs are the permanent dependence of the worker. Emergency jobs will never heal the depression.

Obviously, the normal jobs lie in the production and distribution of goods and services; in other words, the factories, the mills, the mines, the railways, the public utilities, the stores, the offices.

And every part of this mechanism is lubricated by what we call credit. That is, the ability of the manager of a business to borrow money to buy his raw materials and to pay his labor. This credit is the very lifeblood of this whole structure. It is the lifeblood of jobs. If credit fails, the enterprise dries up; it withers or it dies. And jobs decrease or disappear.

And what is the source of credit? The savings of the people themselves. These are gathered in a myriad of tiny rivulets of their deposits in the banks, their premiums to life insurance companies, their dues to benevolent fraternal organizations, their payments to building and loan associations, and a score of other ways. These rivulets in total volume are a mighty river. Their waters are stored in credit reservoirs. These are the banks, mortgage companies, the insurance companies, investments in the services of industry and business.

Thus credit is born of the people themselves. What the people give, the people can take away. The reservoirs of credit are built upon the confidence of the people in them. Fear is death to credit.

When the great economic earthquakes abroad struck directly at the credit structures of those foreign countries, the shocks reverberated to us. I have already said foreigners dumped their securities here at panic prices and demanded gold in payment. They claimed their deposits from American banks. They demanded cash for all goods they had sold us. Our own people, in fear, drew out $1,500,000,000 of their savings from our own banks.

Thus credit began to dry up. The managers of business turned in vain for the accustomed loans to buy raw materials and to pay their labor.

Beyond all this contraction of credit was the fear and panic through the world, spreading its destruction into the United States. It imperiled the institutions in which were the savings of every fireside—bank deposits or insurance policies or investments. In this contraction of credit lay dangers to every one who owed money, for upon demand for immediate payment he was compelled to sell his property in a limited and vastly depreciated market and so was threatened with ruin.

Points to Steps Taken To Aid Bank Depositors.

Faced with these unprecedented perils, we took unprecedented steps. We refused to allow these destructive forces to run their course to chaos and ruin. We organized the cooperation of the community; we thrust the strength of the Government as a shield before the people as has never been done before in the history of all time.

I have referred to these gigantic measures on other occasions. I will not take your time to again describe the weapons and instrumentalities we have brought to bear in this battle. We created them, and we created them to preserve your savings deposits, your insurance policies; to protect you from forcelosure on your homes. We did it to hold for you the jobs you have and, finally, to recover the ground lost in the battle and restore the jobs which have been lost. It has been a battle with inevitable casualties, but that battle is now being won. Credit is being expanded and normal jobs are coming back.

These agencies are working day and night. They are producing results. September alone shows an increase of 3.6 per cent in employment for the whole country. If these policies shall be uninterrupted, if we shall hold the financial integrity of the United States by maintaining a balance in our budget, these measures and the courage and industry of our people will bring back our economic system a long way toward its normal functioning and the restoration of our people to their jobs.

Let no man say that things could not have been worse. Without these many measures things would have been so much worse that today would look like prosperity in retrospect.

12. It must be clear to you and clear to the country that a major part of the shocks and dislocations which have brought this destruction are of foreign origin. They are not of American making; but by the fact that we have suffered from them it is implied that labor and agriculture have a fundamental interest in securing greater stability abroad. Our self-containment is such that we can build back a long way on our own resources. But if it is possible to improve the internal stability of other nations, it would at once allow them to relax their emergency restrictions against exchange and the import of commodities; it would allow them to return to stable currencies and enable the world to be free from political shocks—all of which build for American markets for the American farmer and for American labor. It would protect the American worker and farmer and business man from the rising flood of goods due to depreciated currencies and lowered standards of living. To this major end, which means work for our unemployed and increased prices for our farmers, we have given great devotion over the past year.

Armaments Called Root of Depression.

As the first direction to strike at the root of such evils I have proposed that the armaments of the world should not only be cut by one-third, but that the weapons and methods in use should be so altered as to increase the power of defensive weapons and decrease the power of offensive weapons. We not only thereby seek to remove fear and political shocks, but the substantial acceptance of this proposal would save the United States over $200,000,000 annually and through savings of taxation in European countries would increase their buying power by probably a billion dollars a year. It would release a thousand energies among their people.

Further, we have taken part in the development of a world economic conference to be held later in the year to consider a multitude of monetary and other economic questions which will reduce the obstacles to recovery.

In this connection, with all these problems, the European war debts to the United States constantly arise. I have consistently opposed cancellation of these debts. The Democratic candidate, to use his own words, proposes to reduce our tariffs so that out of Europe's profits through the increased trade they would obtain from us Europe would pay us these debt annuities. That is vastly worse than cancellation. This would take money out of the pockets of the farmer, laborer, and business man to pay Europe's debts.

In the constructive handling of this question I have said that I would favor the utilization of war debts to advantage agriculture and labor. Such action has received support of many leaders of labor and agriculture.

I am confident that if these policies which we are proposing in building up in these three directions—that is, disarmament, economic stabilization of the world, and the proposed use of these debts to secure the ends I have mentioned—I believe we can confidently hope to promote more rapid recovery, and that we can greatly safeguard ourselves from future economic shocks.

And that is the record of organization and measures in aid to labor. It is radical in its defense of our people's interests; it is progressive in constructive advancement of our people; it is conservative in maintaining the fundamental principles of American life.

I should like to digress for a moment to a more personal matter. In my hand I have a copy of the instructions issued by the Democratic national committee to their speakers I find a paragraph referring to my "dark labor record." I am glad that is neither pink nor red. But they say: "First and indelible his early record is clouded by his former partnerships which contracted cheap Chinese coolie labor in South African mines." It goes further with references to statements of Democratic leaders grieving over this Coolie labor and implies that I engaged in the slavery of human beings.

MARYLANDERS TOLD WHY TARIFF IS VITAL

Hoover Traces History of Policy to Free State's Appeal in 1789.

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The text of President Hoover's speech here today follows:

Even if no other reminder were needed, the mills of Cumberland would recall the importance of the protective tariff. If it were not for that Republican policy these celenese mills would be closed down this minute.

The people of Maryland are vastly interested in maintaining the protective tariff. You have taken an active interest in it ever since the founding of this republic.

The people of Maryland had a large part in the passage of the first protective tariff in our country. On April 11, 1789, a group of manufacturing works and others of Baltimore joined in a petition to President Washington and the first session of the first Congress. It was indeed the first petition filed with the Congress.

First Legislation Tariff.

They prayed that the new Government would render the country independent in fact as well as in name and give early attention to the encouragement and protection of American manufacturers and workmen by invoking upon all foreign articles which can be made in America such duties as would give a just and decided preference to their labors and thereby discontinue that trade which tended to so materially injure them.

President Washington responded to that petition and the first piece of legislation passed by the Congress and signed by the first President was a protective tariff.

From that day to this the State of Maryland has had this independence which its citizens demanded. It has grown constantly in strength. And not only are the industries of Maryland today dependent on protective tariff, but a large part of her agriculture as well. Your dairy products, truck products, wheat, corn, live stock are so near the seaboard that the countries of cheap production could penetrate your markets and do great injury to your farming industry. You will find that today practically every farm article produced in the State of Maryland could be imported for less than the present price, depressed as those prices may be.

Safety Lies in G. O. P. Tariff.

The Democratic party is opposed to a protective tariff. It proposes to reduce these tariffs. In its platform, in lieu of a protective tariff, it proposes a competitive tariff for revenue. It denounces the present tariffs as exorbitant.

Their candidates and supporting orators demand reduction in the face of depreciating currencies in foreign countries during the last twelve months which have resulted in still further reduction of their living standards. Indeed the increase in imports into our country of certain lines of manufacture by virtue of this depreciation is already beginning to displace our workmen in certain localities.

I would submit to the thoughtful citizens of Maryland that your first interest lies in sustaining the party whose policies and whose candidates alone can be relied upon to maintain protection to your jobs, your farms, and your industries from destruction through imports of cheap goods and the products of cheap land.

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

and denounced time and again. Some of my friends have even gone to the extent of digging up the public records of 28 years ago, which show that the time Chinese labor was imported into South Africa I publicly protested on the grounds that high-paid skilled labor would do the work more efficiently, and further no South African concern with which I was ever connected ever employed a single Chinese laborer. But more important than this, I happen to have in the files in Washington, from the man who first penned those lies, a statement under oath, humbly and abjectly withdrawing them.

Such contemptible statements in a political campaign would be ignored were it not that they were issued by the authority of the Democratic national committee, and they would be of no interest to the American people except that it is proposed that a political party shall be placed in power over 120,000,000 of people on the basis of votes secured in this manner.

I should like a moment also, shortly, to indicate the Democratic record of action during this trying period.

The Democratic party has laid before the country its program both in the last session of Congress and in the promises of its candidates.

At no time in the history of the United States have we required more constructive statesmanship than in the past two years. The Democratic party in the last congressional election promised a definite program for restoration of the country. That program was not disclosed until eighteen months later in the House of Representatives which they controlled. Aside from the patriotic support of some of their members to our program, the organized program of their party was evidenced by passage through the House of a series of bills which had to be stopped either by veto or successful opposition in the Senate through public support. These bills consisted of an omnibus pension bill; of an order to the Federal reserve board and the Treasury to fix prices in the United States, which they could not physically carry out; of a $1,200,000,000 pork-barrel public works bill; of payment of a cash bonus to veterans of $2,300,000,000; of the issuance of $2,300,000,000 of old-fashioned greenbacks, which I have referred to; of the destruction of the effectiveness of the Tariff Commission, and of placing the United States Government into direct and personal banking on a stupendous scale.

Instead of decreasing Government expenditures, as they are assuring the country that they will do if they are given full control of the Government, they failed to accept the recommendation of the administration for reduction of expenditures, and on top of it they passed measures which would have increased our expenditures by $3,500,000,000.

We are willing to rest our case upon comparison with these records of actual performance—not upon promises.

In closing, let me carry these issues to a plane far above all personal considerations. I have discussed with you tonight the battles we have fought, the measures and policies we have in action which more particularly relate to those who work at the bench and at the desk. Parallel with these actions other battles have been fought on a score of fronts, in behalf of agriculture, industry and business, to which the welfare of every worker is indissolubly related.

We have been fighting, not only as an administration but as a people, to relieve distress, to repel impending catastrophes, to restore the functioning of our economic life. This economic system has but one end to serve. That end is not the making of money. It is to create security in the millions of homes of our country to produce increasing comfort, to open wider the windows of hope, to increase the moral and spiritual stature of our people to give opportunity for that understanding upon which national ideals and national character may be more and more strengthened.

In securing these ends the first necessity is to preserve those previous heritages and principles which have come down to us forged in the fires of long generations of Americans. Principles and institutions which, while they have the imperfections of humanity, yet represent the highest expressions of human attainment in thousands of years.

And to me a great historical truth has been revealed during this period of trial and stress This is the striking fact, driven home above all others, that never during these trying weeks, months, and years has the soul of America yielded to the bitter sting of defeat. Bewilderment and dismay seized upon some of our people, but never did the spirit of America itself surrender. Never for an instant did the American people lose faith in the principles of their Government, their institutions, their country, or their God Had America not stood stanch in this world storm; had it surrendered; had our people lost faith, the tide of disintegration might now engulf us all.

It has been the intangible and mighty forces of this unconquerable spirit of the Nation that has overcome the dangers and perils which might have plunged the world in a long period of chaos. Incessant above the storms in business, above the din of political debate and legislative battle, there has been the firm, strong voice of the people bidding that we should carry on.

No one who has seen this battle as I have seen it, who has watched the bright fabric of recovery woven laboriously from day to day, with the stout efforts of American faith and confidence in their people, could harbor a doubt for the future of this Nation.

If there shall be no retreat, if the attack shall continue as it is now organized, then this battle is won.

HOOVER IN FIGHTING ANSWER TO DEMOCRATS ON SLUMP

There was another laugh as the President, telling of the difficulty in predicting a panic, said he had not noticed any "Democratic Jeremiahs."

Refutes "Coolie" Libel.

"That's telling 'em," some one shouted from the audience when Mr. Hoover quoted the Democratic candidate concerning the stock market crash and added that "the vast majority" of stock transactions "originated or took place in the State of New York."

Making one of the few gestures of his speech, President Hoover pounded repeatedly on his speaking desk when asserting that he had secured a sworn statement withdrawing published "lies" that he had employed cheap Chinese labor during his earlier career as an engineer in South Africa.

His audience applauded several times during his brief references to Democratic statements which he said "implied I engaged in human slavery." The President completed his address in about 1 hour and 15 minutes.

The Chief Executive and the First Lady were cheered again and again as they visited three more halls within the huge auditorium, where overflow crowds waited for them.

Greeted on Journey West.

In a basement hall, the President remarked that "I don't believe you want to hear much more political debate this evening."

"Your reception," he added, "gives us great strength to carry on this battle to the end."

While pushing through Ohio to Cleveland for the campaign speech tonight, President Hoover told crowds along the way of efforts by the Government to stop the flow of foreign rubber into this country and cited what he called "tangible and positive evidence of gradual economic recovery."

The Chief Executive made three prepared speeches in his swift swing through four States from the National Capital to Cleveland, where, in what his aids called a "fighting speech," he said he would discuss relief extended by the administration to the citizens of the Nation.

Rubber Dumping Probe.

At Akron, he announced that the Treasury Department at his instructions had been holding an inquiry during the last week to determine whether the rubber goods which he said were beginning to flow into the country in large quantities were in violation of antidumping laws. He also told the crowd at that rubber center that the Tariff Commission was investigating to determine whether the duties on these products should be increased.

To a crowd at Youngstown he said that increased steel production was "tangible and positive" evidence that we are winning this battle.

Earlier in the day, at Cumberland, Md., the President had commended Republican protective tariff policies and asserted that the Democrats proposed to reduce them.

At seven other stops along the way, the President and Mrs. Hoover made rear platform appearances, but the Chief Executive did not discuss campaign issues.

It was at Cumberland, Md., that Mr. Hoover mentioned the tariff and urged Maryland citizens to vote to maintain protection of home industries. He was greeted by an estimated crowd of 5,000 that overflowed the station and a nearby park. They provided band music and cheers.

Talks Tariff in Maryland.

"Even though no other reminder were needed," Mr. Hoover said into a hastily erected microphone, "the mills of Cumberland would recall the importance of the protective tariff. If it were not for that Republican party these celanese mills would be closed down this minute."

He asserted that not only the industries of Maryland but its agriculture as well were dependent upon the Republican tariff, pointing out the close proximity of the State to the Atlantic seaboard.

"You will find," he said, "that today practically every farm article produced in the State of Maryland could be imported for less than the present price, depressed as those prices may be.

"The Democratic party is opposed to a protective tariff. It proposes to reduce these tariffs. In its platform, in lieu of a protective tariff, it proposes a competitive tariff for revenue. It denounces the present tariffs as exorbitant.

"Their candidates and supporting orators demand reduction in the face of depreciating currencies in foreign countries during the last twelve months which have resulted in still further reduction in their living standards.

Continues to Polish Speech.

"Indeed, the increase in imports into our country of certain lines of manufacture by virtue of this depreciation is already beginning to displace our workmen in certain localities."

Between train stops, Mr. Hoover worked almost uninterruptedly in revising his address. Last night the lights of the Executive Mansion burned until past midnight before he concluded his then final draft. With him was Walter Hope, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and now a New York banker.

Simultaneously another of the aids, Walter H. Newton, worked in the executive offices nearby until the small hours As early as the Chief Executive arose—shortly before daybreak—another of his aids, French Strother, was up an hour before him to work on the Cleveland address.

Hoover Leadership Is Lauded at Rally

Indiana G. O. P. Leader Is Speaker at Meeting in Alexandria.

The speaker referred to the efforts of the President in keeping this Nation on the gold standard He declared that other countries who have gone off the gold standard are in far worse circumstances than the United States.

Mrs. Virginia White Speel, national committeewoman from the District, also spoke. The club was notified by Mr. Whitlock that F. L. Flynn, president of the club, had been appointed by the National Republican Committee as director of the League of Republican Clubs for the State of Virginia.

Hunters Will Trail Circus Lions Today

Expedition Is Hoping to Meet No Further Opposition.

Benton, Mo., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Weary and travel-stained from 20 hours on the road, the Wright Lion Hunting expedition stopped here tonight for a rest before they attempt to stage a lion hunt tomorrow

Tomorrow, if everything goes well, two young lions now in a cage on the expedition's truck, will be loosed on an island in the Mississippi River and hunted to their death by members of the party The lions, acquired from a stranded circus, howled dismally today from hunger and discomfort resulting form the lurching truck.

The hunt has met with opposition in every quarter. The Missouri Humane Society has complained, the attorney general has disapproved, and the authorities and residents of southeast Missouri have objected. Denver M. Wright, owner of the animals, tried to sell, trade or give away the lions, but was unable to get rid of them.

A REPORT TO THE PEOPLE.

In his Cleveland speech President Hoover made telling points in reply to those who are saying that "things could not be worse." Fair-minded citizens will admit that a wholesale wage reduction in 1930 would have made conditions much worse, by precipitating strikes, lockouts, and riots. The quick action of the President in bringing together the representatives of capital and labor resulted in agreements which have held to this day, whereby strikes have been avoided. The severity of the depression has forced wages down, but workingmen have seen the necessity of readjustment and have co-operated in maintaining industrial peace and good will.

The first task undertaken by President Hoover when the depression threatened hardship to the needy was to mobilize State and community organizations to provide relief. These organizations have performed wonderful work, supported by self-reliant communities. The States are now enabled to obtain funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for relief purposes. Mr. Hoover reminds the country that he obtained this help for the States only after a battle with Congress.

The expansion of public works for employment relief was urged upon the States early in 1930 by the President, who also brought about an increase of nearly $800,000,000 in Federal expenditures for necessary public works. The States as a rule were unable to carry on enlarged public works, but the Federal Government is now expending enormous sums at the instance of President Hoover. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation stands ready to lend hundreds of millions more for self-liquidating projects, but these projects are not numerous, although unsound schemes abound without number. The corporation refuses to squander public money upon them. About $400,000,000 will be expended on projects already approved, and thousands of families are already provided for.

By leading the way in the process of spreading work, by inducing railroads to replace equipment and thus give more employment, by bringing about the establishment of home loan banks whereby foreclosures of mortgages on homes are prevented, and by preventing the squandering of money on useless projects, President Hoover warded off calamities infinitely worse than any hardships that have been suffered.

The work of national rehabilitation is not complete, although all agencies are now operating. There is still the threat of two calamities—the enactment of a bonus law with its provision for debased money, which would destroy the Government's credit, and the substitution of a dole for the present system of relief through increase of employment. Pressure for the bonus and the dole is constant and plausible. Millions of citizens are misled into believing that these measures would give immediate and permanent relief. They do not perceive that destruction of the Government's credit would ruin industry and make unemployment practically universal, and they are equally blind to the fact that a direct dole for relief would destroy employment by making taxes so ruinously high that no industry could survive.

Extrication of the United States from the depression is a vast and complicated task. It can not be accomplished by waving a magic wand, ordering the Treasury to pour out its gold. The people get from the Treasury only what they pay in. If they are forced to pay the bonus or the dole they will suffer ruin instead of merely enduring hard times.

As the campaign sharpens the issues it becomes clear that the program now in operation must continue, and that the program sponsored by Speaker Garner must be defeated if the country is to recover. Gov. Roosevelt has already approved some of the major parts of the Hoover program. He has not yet declared his opposition to the bonus or a dole. Public uncertainty as to Gov. Roosevelt's intentions doubtless will be removed soon by his forthcoming addresses.

THE BONUS THREAT.

Gov. Roosevelt is soon to make known his attitude toward the soldiers' bonus. The public has anxiously awaited his announcement. Since millions of citizens believe that he will be President after March 4, and since they are equally convinced that payment of the soldiers' bonus would crush all hopes of recovery, the importance of a statement from Gov. Roosevelt is apparent. The uncertainty regarding Gov. Roosevelt's position on this question has caused a large part of the public to hold back all enterprise.

All the elements of recovery are present except full public confidence. Speaker Garner is right in saying that the only thing lacking is "confidence in our credit structure." He attributes this withholding of confidence to public distrust of Mr. Hoover's management of Federal finances, but he should have gone a step further and stated that the greatest peril to the budget is the possibility of enactment of the soldiers' bonus, to be paid for by debased money. Mr. Garner should have declared his opposition to the bonus.

If this threat can be made less ominous by a clear-cut statement from Gov. Roosevelt in opposition to the bonus, as positive as that made by President Hoover, the people will feel that the future is reasonably safe, in spite of the bonus agitation that is coming. Heavier taxes are necessary to balance the budget, but they will be cheerfully borne if times are better and the bonus raid killed off.

An equivocal statement by Gov. Roosevelt, or one intimating that he might not veto a bonus bill, would greatly discourage business at this time. Such a statement would do him harm and might defeat him. He is not expected to make this mistake. It is generally believed that he will oppose payment of the bonus. Nevertheless, business men without regard to party are waiting to make sure of his position. Speaker Garner's acquiescence in the House action in favor of the bonus raises the presumption that the Democratic party favors payment of the bonus at this time. If that presumption is wrong, Gov. Roosevelt should hasten to correct it.

THE HIGHEST TARIFF.

What nation in the world has the highest tariffs?

Nine out of every ten Americans answer, "The United States, of course". Such responses merely testify to the fact that a large majority of citizens draw their opinions from political ballyhoo rather than from authoritative information. At a time when so much propaganda about "exorbitant American tariff rates" is in circulation, a glance at a couple of tariff measuring rods may prove interesting.

In comparing the tariff duties of one country with another it must be borne in mind that special rates are allowed to favored customers by many European nations. Furthermore, some countries indulge in outright embargoes and quota regulations, which are far more prohibitive than tariffs.

But two measuring rods have been worked out which give a fairly accurate idea of the height of the various tariff walls of the world. The first is the average percentage of import duty charged by a country, computed upon all of its imports, and the second is the amount of duty collected by each country on a per capita basis. Application of these two measuring rods puts the United States in a position about midway between the extremes of protection and free trade.

On the percentage of import duty charged, Salvador stands foremost among the high tariff nations, with 79 per cent. Guatemala is next with 48 per cent. Duties in most of the Central and South American countries range from 20 to 43 per cent. The United States is on a par with Argentina and China, with 17 per cent. Canada charges an average of 16 per cent on all her imports; Mexico, 26; Great Britain, 15; Czechoslovakia, 11; Denmark, 12; Finland, 33; France, 14; Germany, 12; Italy, 15; Japan, 9; Australia, 26, and New Zealand, 18 per cent. Belgium and the Netherlands are at the bottom of the list with 4 and 3 per cent respectively.

Applying the other test—the amount of duty per capita collected by each country on foreign imports—Great Britain and her dominions top the list. New Zealand is first, with $27.74 in duties per capita in 1931. Australia is second, with $22.07. Canada collected $13.86 per capita and Great Britain $12.89. Other countries near the top of the list are Denmark, with $15.57 per capita; Switzerland, with $12.58; Norway, with $10.13, and Chili, with $10.26. China received the smallest amount of duty per capita, which was 19 cents. Japan was close to the bottom, with 84 cents.

According to this measurement nearly all of the major nations of Europe impose higher tariffs on imports than does the United States. Germany's per capita collections were $4.50; those of France, $5.48; of Italy, $3.36. In the United States the amount of duty collected per capita was only $2.85. In this respect the United States tariff is among the lowest of trade barriers.

Comparison of specific rates shows that many American duties are mere molehills compared with the protective mountains thrown up around some foreign lands. In some instances the measurements here applied do not give an accurate picture of the trade restrictions. But at least they are sufficient to demolish the myth that the American tariff is the highest in the world.

TAX ADJUSTMENTS.

Just why the American Bar Association should have interested itself in the tax question is not clear, except that lawyers, like all other citizens, are annoyed by the amount of taxes they have to pay. In recommending lower income taxes the association suggested that the Government make more use of "forms of taxes less susceptible to sharp fluctuations as a result of changes in general business and professional activity." The last phrase contains a hint that the lawyers of the country resent the high income taxes imposed upon them by the last Congress.

Several years ago Secretary Mellon recommended to Congress an expansion of the taxing base so that wide fluctuations in revenue might be avoided. But Congress took no action until it was forced to revise the tax laws by a deficit of more than $2,000,000,000 in the Federal Treasury. In adopting the present act Congress not only broadened the base of the income tax, but put levies on almost every commercial activity that promised to yield substantial revenue without increasing the cost of living to people in need. Results obtained from these levies lead to the conclusion that no taxes are productive in periods of hard times.

Working out a satisfactory tax system is one of the most difficult tasks that confront Congress. Every group opposes levies that fall heavily upon its members. Labor fights the sales tax; manufacturers consider special excise taxes unusually obnoxious; motorists resent the ever increasing gasoline taxes; business objects to taxes on corporate earnings and professional men find high income taxes especially burdensome. The fact that complaints are heard from many sources suggests that the tax burden is resting heavily upon the shoulders of the public and that the people are in a mood for tax reforms.

The advantages of drawing taxes from many sources are especially obvious in times like the present. Yet if Congress goes too far afield in levying taxes, it encroaches upon the revenue sources of the States and local governments. This results in double taxation, which is always obnoxious.

Objection number one to present taxes is that they are too high. That can be corrected only by rigid governmental economy.

Objection number two is that taxes are uncoordinated and are applied unequally to various groups. Much dissatisfaction with present taxing methods arises from the fact that taxes levied by one governmental unit may be duplicated by another. Each unit has simply added more haphazard levies when the need for more revenue has become apparent. The need for coordination, as well as reduction of taxes, is urgent. No doubt President Hoover's taxation conference to be called after election will give great impetus to this reform.

The Heart Bowed Down.

POST HASTE.

The President not only spoke at Cleveland, but Democrats realized that he spoke as Cleveland would have spoken in this situation.

One difference between Gov. Roosevelt and the author of the Declaration of Independence is that when Jefferson listed a string of obvious and undisputed generalities he labeled them "self-evident truths."

Henry Ford is going to make a radio talk for Hoover. It would be more high-powered if he would make it from the Lincoln factory.

The efforts of a man to break into a Federal prison for an alleged crime 34 years ago shows how careful the authorities must be to prevent impostors sponging on Uncle Sam's bed and board.

Speaker Garner's explanationing of how the depression is due to failure to balance the budget in 1932 was not as clear as his reasons for avoiding discussion of the rotten financial bills passed by the House.

Hiram Johnson says he will not taint his record by supporting Hoover. 'Tain't necessary, senator; you are welcome to join the lame duck club of Brookhart and Blaine.

"Friends of Gov. Roosevelt expressed the belief that he is only waiting for a proper time and place to expound his views on the bonus." Since his nomination 109 days have offered that many times, and he has been in many places.

At a New York Democratic rally Mrs. Simkhovich claimed that Gov. Roosevelt is the heir of Bull Moose ideals, an opinion in which she was supported by Miss Jane Hoey.

Everything went up last week, including Chairman Farley's hope of carrying more than 48 States.

Air travel has increased 100 per cent in a year. Business must be getting better if folks are in such a hurry.

Gov. Roosevelt will have to speak to those Democratic senators from Massachusetts who are appealing for more protection while he is advocating tariff reduction.

It never occurred to Speaker Garner that congressional delay and fear of radical House measures upset budget estimates—anyhow, he didn't mention it.

A modern difficulty in the way of winning an election on a "wave of discontent" is that so many women voters know the difference between a finger wave and a permanent.

Naturally Gov. Roosevelt doesn't like to commit himself on the bonus at this late date and under fire, but there is only one man responsible for his having been backed into a corner.

The two colonels running for governor are nuts for New York's pungent columniators.

Gov. Roosevelt's advocacy of "sound public works" was a slam for his running mate, but it may qualify him for a job with the R. F. C. about the 9th of next month. PAUL HUDSON.

LINCOLN ON THE TARIFF

Extracted From Abraham Lincoln's Addresses and Writings.

It seems to be an opinion very generally entertained that the condition of a nation is best whenever it can buy cheapest; but this is not necessarily true, because if, at the same time and by the same cause, it is compelled to sell correspondingly cheap, nothing is gained. Then it is said the best condition is when we can buy cheapest and sell dearest; but this again is not necessarily true, because with both these we might have scarcely anything to sell, or, which is the same thing, to buy with

These reflections show that to reason and act correctly on this subject we must look not merely to buying cheap, nor yet to buying cheap and selling dear, but also to have constant employment, so that we may have the largest possible amount of something to sell. This matter of employment can only be secured by an ample, steady, and certain market to sell the products of our labor in.

But let us yield the point, and admit that by abandoning the protective policy our farmers can purchase their supplies of manufactured articles cheaper than by continuing it; and then let us see whether, even at that, they will upon the whole be gainers by the change. To simplify this question, let us suppose the whole agricultural interest of the country to be in the hands of one man, who has one hundred laborers in his employ; the whole manufacturing interest to be in the hands of one other man, who has twenty laborers in his employ. The farmer owns all the plowed and pasture land, and the manufacturer all the iron mines and coal banks and sites of water power. Each is pushing on his own way, and obtaining supplies from the other so far as he needs—that is, the manufacturer is buying of the farmer all the cotton he can use in his cotton factory; all the wool he can use in his woolen establishment; all the bread and meats as well as all the fruits and vegetables which are necessary for himself and all his hands in all his departments; all the corn and oats and hay which are necessary for all his horses and oxen, as well as fresh supplies of horses and oxen themselves to do all his heavy hauling about his iron works and generally of every sort. The farmer in turn is buying of the manufacturer all the iron, iron tools, wooden tools, cotton goods, woolen goods, &c., that he needs in his business and for his hands.

But after a while the farmer discovers that were it not for the protective policy he could buy all of these supplies cheaper from a European manufacturer, owing to the fact that the price of labor is only one-quarter as high there as here. He and his hands are a majority of the whole, and therefore, have the legal and moral right to have their interest first consulted. They throw off the protective policy; the farmer ceases buying of the home manufacturer.

But they soon discover that to buy, even at the cheaper rate, requires something to buy with.

Falling short in this particular, one of the farmers takes a load of wheat to the miller and gets it made into flour, and starts, as has been his custom, to the iron furnace. He approaches the well-known spot, but, strange to say, all is cold and still as death; no smoke rises, no furnace roars, no anvil rings.

After some search he finds the owner of the desolate place and calls out to him: "Come, Vulcan, don't you want to buy a load of flour?"

"Why," says Vulcan, "I am hungry enough, to be sure; haven't tasted bread for a week, but then you see my works are stopped and I have nothing to give you for your flour."

"But, Vulcan, why don't you go to work and get something?"

"I am ready to do so; will you hire me, farmer?"

"Oh, no; I could only set you to raising wheat; and you see I have more of that already than I can get anything for."

"But give me employment and send your flour to Europe for a market."

"Why, Vulcan; how silly you talk. Don't you know they raise wheat in Europe as well as here, and labor is so cheap there as to fix the price of flour so low as scarcely to pay the long carriage of it from here, leaving nothing whatever to me?"

"But, farmer, couldn't you pay to raise and prepare garden-stuffs and fruits, such as radishes, cabbages, Irish and sweet potatoes, cucumbers, watermelons and muskmelons, plums, pears, peaches, apples and the like? All these are good things and used to sell well."

"So they did use to sell well, but it was to you we sold them, and now you tell us you have nothing to buy with. Of course, I can not sell such things to the other farmers, because each of them raises enough for himself, and, in fact, rather wishes to sell than buy. Neither can I send them to Europe for a market, because, to say nothing of European markets being stocked with such articles at lower prices than I can afford, they are of such a nature as to rot before they could reach there. The truth is, Vulcan, I am compelled to quit raising these things altogether, except a few for my own use, and this leaves part of my own time idle on my hands, instead of my finding employment for you."

If at any time all labor should cease and all existing provisions be equally divided among the people, at the end of a single year there could scarcely be one human being left alive; all would have perished by want of subsistence. So, again, if upon such division all that sort of labor which produces provisions should cease, and each individual should take up so much of his share as he could and carry it continually around his habitation, although in this carrying the amount of labor going on might be as great as ever, so long as it could last, at the end of the year the result would be precisely the same—that is, none would be left living

PEGASUS.

Men told me Pegasus had grown passe,
His arching neck drooped low, his white mane torn
By angry winds, that argent wings were shorn.
They said he limped beneath the Milky Way,
Gazing at orbits where he used to play—
He who had trampled clouds with flaming scorn,
Who raced the moon before the earth was born,
When stars were young and he was proud as they.

It is not true. I know his tossing mane
Streams backward in the gale, for down the sky
Blow meteor sparks he strikes with hoofs of gold.
Oblivious of zeppelin and of plane,
He gallops where no man has dared to fly.
Bright pinioned Pegasus can not grow old.

IN THE MARYLAND HILLS.

Though interspersed with poplars in pale yellow, slim and tall.

I knew they were on fire because a smoky, languid haze

I saw a wind spring up and toss the oak trees all about

Spilled over to scrub-bushes, the fire is spreading fast
The gums and maples too, take fire as Autumn rushes past.

THE MERCHANT MARINE AND SEA POWER.

The merchant marine is one of the most important elements of sea power. By the London Treaty we have made it possible to gain parity in naval power. We should not be content until we have parity in merchant marine, and therefore, with our fleet, parity in sea power. It has even been proposed that battleships be abolished. Aside from the arguments for and against battleships, we can not afford to destroy our battleships or abolish them as such until we have a merchant marine equal at least to that of the greatest sea power in the world. The importance of a merchant marine to sea power and its use in time of war as aircraft carriers, is so great that I believe it would be a wise policy for the Government to encourage operating companies to construct merchant ships which could be used as aircraft carriers in time of emergency. The merchant marine in recent years, due to the wise governmental policies put in force, is progressing now as it has not been for many years, and our flag is again seen over the seven seas.

THESE THINGS ARE STRONG.

These things are strong, when other strong things fail;
The urge that quickens grass; the deep still tides
Of ocean; and, beneath a sweeping gale,
The slender reed that bows, and still abides;
The granite peaks of silence; and the tie
That binds the heart of woman, ages-long,
To petal-softness and a first frail cry
Making her mother. These are the things most strong.

The strength of ships goes down before a storm,
The strength of athletes meets the dust at last;
But when familiar strong things crumble, warm
Your confidence with sight of these, hold fast
To these and sing; for these things, and a song
That rises from discouragement, are strong.

A CAMPAIGN LOG

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN

IN view of the recent attacks of Democratic campaign orators upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it is enlightening to hear what the financial community has to say of the emergency operations to date. Describing the tense credit situation which existed in the United States from March to June this year, the current issue of The Magazine of Wall Street likens the R. F. C. directorate to a fire department. For weeks on end in the first half of the year, these firemen were at their post practically 24 hours a day—uncertain from hour to hour whether they would win or lose in their heroic struggle against a financial panic and the complete collapse of American economy. As late as May this year—before Congress passed the tax and economy bills—an internationally known figure in the New York banking community said: "There are only three chances in five that the United States will get through the summer without a universal financial conflagration."

Here is the complete picture which only those who were dealing with the problem in Washington and a relatively small section of the population could see at the time:

> The monetary woods were as dry as tinder, the air was hot and arid, strong winds were blowing and sparks and brands were flying from the fires of hundreds of bank failures. It was touch and go whether the local fires could be put out before, under the prevailing conditions, they would suddenly explode into a general financial conflagration the like of which the Republic had not seen since 1837, when every bank outside of New England suspended.
>
> In Washington there was a fire department planned to fight money and credit fires. It had thirty-two branch stations throughout the country. All night long, night after night, following a day of failure, fighting men stood guard at telephones and telegraph offices waiting for alarms. They came, time and again. Many a night the tired fire-fighters were aroused from their beds and called to the central station at Pennsylvania avenue and Eighteenth street northwest, to listen to some such report as this:
>
> "The First National Bank of ——— will not be able to open its doors tomorrow morning unless it receives a loan of $1,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If it suspends all the banks in the State will go down."

* * * *

The Silent Fight.

SUCH emergencies arose, at one time or another, in virtually every State in the Union. One Saturday afternoon an excited telephone message from a large industrial center in the Middlewest informed the R. F. C. that a certain bank would suspend on Monday morning, and that with it would go eleven other banks in the same county. Because of the size of the city, it appeared likely that a hundred banks in the same State might collapse.

But by Monday morning the pivotal institution had been rescued through an R. F. C. loan. That fire was out. Only 24 persons in the city involved and seven directors of the R. F. C. knew of the disaster which had been averted. In the confidential records of the corporation, hundreds of comparable cases are to be found. The details, however, never will be made public, despite the instance of Speaker Garner and his supporters in the last session of Congress.

In summarizing the achievements of the R. F. C., Mr. John C. Cresswill says in his magazine article:

> The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has accomplished its original purpose to save the Nation from a sweeping money and credit panic, which, it is calculated, would have overthrown perhaps 15,000 of the country's 20,000 banks, and nobody knows how many insurance companies, building and loan associations and great business concerns.

* * * *

As Mr. Garner Saw It.

IN his radio address from New York Friday night, Speaker Garner, the Democratic vice presidential nominee, challenged President Hoover's Des Moines statement that America tottered last winter on the brink of financial collapse and economic chaos. Mr. Garner's own statement of his understanding of the situation which existed during those critical days is most illuminating.

> Because of my position in the Government, I know there was never a warrant for saying that we were on the edge of financial collapse, world crash and Government failure. The whole thing is absurd. I can not conceive that either Mr. Mellon or Mr. Mills made such a statement, nor can I conceive that President Hoover would have uttered such an obvious error unless somebody had told him that such was the fact.

The implication of this statement is clear. Mr. Garner proudly professes not to know yet what happened in the United States during the last session of Congress.

Perhaps the Speaker of the House is not required to be informed on the state of the Union. Indeed, Mr. Garner once boasted publicly during the last session that he had not read the President's message to Congress on that very subject. But studied indifference to the national welfare is one thing in a Speaker and quite another thing in a Democratic candidate for the Vice Presidency. As opposition leader in the Congress last February, Mr. Garner had, as he saw it, no real responsibility to his countrymen, beyond the obligation to grind great heaps of campaign grist from the legislative mill. But in the campaign, the good name of the whole system of pure politics demands at least a pretense of sound knowledge concerning national affairs.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY—

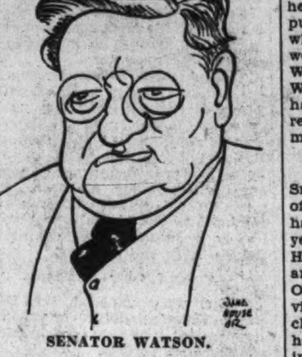
Being the day-by-day observations of a "member-at-large" set down for his own satisfaction.

By the 97th Senator

Wednesday.

THIS is a bad year for insurgents running for reelection, but it threatens to be just as bad for Old Guardsmen. Some of the most extraordinary upsets in senatorial history are said to be "in the cards." Whether they will actually occur remains to be determined by the trend during the next three weeks.

Word comes from New Hampshire, for example, that George Moses is in serious trouble. It is hard to believe, but the information comes from indisputable authority; in fact, from



JIM BERRYMAN JR.

SENATOR WATSON.

George Moses, who never tries to fool himself about the political outlook. "With me," says George, "it is a case of the old pitcher going to the well once too often."

This is his fourth trip to the well. He was first elected to the Senate in 1918 to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Jacob H. Gallinger, then Republican leader in the Senate. He immediately became a commanding figure in the Senate by reason of his brilliant speeches on the League of Nations, and was admitted into the inner circle of Old Guard leadership, headed by such men as Lodge, Penrose, Knox and Brandegee. Two years later he was reelected almost without a struggle. In 1926 he ran again, and, while a stubborn fight was waged against him, he returned to the Senate with flying colors. Now, six more years have elapsed and he is going to the well again.

The Maine result is having repercussions in New Hampshire. The depression, as elsewhere, is hurting Republican chances. Local complications are a factor. The Democrats have put up an unusually strong State ticket. George isn't conceding defeat, but he admits the necessity for the hardest kind of fighting to win. And even then he doubts whether his majority will be more than 6,000. However, if I were called upon to make a wager I would still bet on George. He is a resourceful and energetic campaigner, who is at his best when backed into a corner.

From Indiana comes unfavorable news concerning Jim Watson. Except for a brief interval, Jim has been in Congress since his early 30s, and now he, too, must go to the well again. In 1926 he had the narrowest kind of an escape from defeat. His margin was only about 11,000. This year he is up against much tougher opposition and conditions are anything but favorable to Republican success in the Hoosier State. Jim's health is failing, but he is waging a valiant campaign. Will Hays has gone back to his native heath to try to save the situation. Maybe he can perform another miracle as he did in 1916 when he pulled Indiana through for the Republican ticket by a margin of 5,000, while its next door neighbor, Ohio, went for Wilson by nearly 90,000. Whatever may be said about Jim Watson's capacity as a statesman, I'd hate to see him lose. He is a cool realist, but one of the most likable men in the Senate.

If straw votes mean anything, Reed Smoot also faces the bitterest fight of his long career for reelection. He has been going to the well for many years. He is the dean of the Senate. He came to the Senate first in 1903 and is now seeking a sixth term. Ordinarily, the Utahans reelect him virtually without opposition. As chairman of the Finance Committee he is in a dominating position, but instead of its being an asset to him this year it seems to be something of a liability. Although a high protectionist of purest ray serene, his enemies are charging that he hasn't done right by Utah industry and with a popular candidate on the Democratic side they are making an energetic campaign against him.

The defeat of this trio—Moses, president pro tempore of the Senate; Watson, Republican floor leader, and Smoot, chairman of the Finance Committee, would be revolutionary, indeed. I prefer to wait until the ballots are counted before making any prediction.

IN MOST States senatorial experience is deemed an asset in running for reelection. A Senator serves six years in Washington, learns the ropes, watches the seniority rule advance him to more favorable committee assignments, and then goes home to tell his constituents how much more he can do for them if they continue him in office instead of electing his upstart opponent who will have to spend the next two or three years getting acquainted in the Capital.

That argument doesn't seem to work in Kentucky. A quaint tradition has sprung up there that a senator should be limited to a single term in Washington. Many years have elapsed since any Kentucky senator has been reelected. Popular Ollie James might have won a second term, but he died within a few months of the election. Gus Stanley was finishing up his first term and seemed likely to secure another when the Coolidge landslide of 1924 hit him. Dick Ernst, elected in 1920 on the crest of the Harding wave, wanted to stay in the Senate, but the voters willed otherwise. Frank Sackett, elected in 1924, saw the handwriting on the wall as the time drew nigh to face the voters again in 1930 and he resigned to accept the ambassadorship to Germany. His successor, John Robison, went down to defeat.

And now we have Alben Barkley trying to shatter the tradition. Barkley was elected in 1926. He has come to the fore rapidly as one of the leaders on the Democratic side. He was Kentucky's favorite son for the Democratic presidential nomination, but he stepped aside for Franklin Roosevelt after the Roosevelt forces agreed to make him keynoter of the Chicago convention. Some of the orthodox Democrats were furious over his selection as keynoter. They charged him with heresy on the tariff. Barkley replied that he was simply trying to even things up for his Kentucky constituents, who wanted a tariff on coal.

Barkley's Republican opponent is Representative Thatcher, of Louisville, who decided to take a whirl at the senatorship after it became apparent he would face a hard fight for reelection to the House.

My Kentucky friends inform me that there is a strong probability of Barkley's breaking the record.

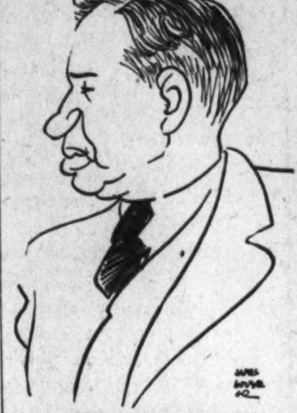
Friday.

AT this stage of the 1928 campaign, Democratic national headquarters became all enthused over the reports received from Pennsylvania. With a little money to promote organization work and get out the vote, Al Smith stood a good chance of carrying the State. The news was incredible to seasoned politicians and political observers, but Mr. Raskob, who wasn't so seasoned, fell for it. Considerable money was sent into Pennsylvania and a vigorous campaign was waged in behalf of Al Smith. The result was impressive. Al got more votes than any Democratic presidential candidate had ever received before in the Keystone State, but after all the ballots had been counted he was still short nearly 1,000,000 of a majority.

After that most sensible Democrats said "never again" concerning Pennsylvania. Never again would they waste their money and energy trying to make a dent in the immense Republican majority there. Never again would they permit their hopes to be heightened by reports of a Pennsylvania upheaval. They completely "swore off."

But some of them are beginning to forget their vows. The straw votes are giving them much encouragement. They haven't any money to send into the State this time, but they are generous with their words of cheer to the party workers. Big Jim Farley, who concedes nothing, puts Pennsylvania down in the doubtful column. Of course, all the Democrats need to do to win the State is to induce 500,000 persons, who voted the Republican ticket four years ago, to change their votes this year.

JIM REED is in his element again—the Democratic high command has commissioned him to tour the Corn Belt and bait Hoover. Jim is a first-class hater, and yields to no one, not even Hiram Johnson, in his dislike of Herbert Hoover. He began hating Hoover long before Hiram did. His speeches in the Senate concerning Hoover when the food-control bill was under consideration in 1917 were classics of vituperation. Jim's tirades are so intemperate, though, that it remains to be seen whether they will hurt Hoover as much as they will help him.



JIM BERRYMAN JR.

SENATOR BARKLEY.

The "radical fringe" which attached itself to Roosevelt is causing him more and more embarrassment. In the State of Washington, the radicals moved into the Democratic primary and captured some of the best prizes. A gentleman named Homer T. Bone won the senatorial nomination. They say he is so "advanced" in his policies that he makes Clarence Dill seem almost as conservative as Reed Smoot. The oldline Democrats were shocked when Roosevelt on his Western trip officially blessed Mr. Bone's candidacy. They are disgruntled and threatening to vote Republican.

On top of this, imagine the joy at Democratic headquarters when Huey Long called on Roosevelt and announced his readiness to take the stump for him from New York to Seattle.

THE DIPLOMATIC POUCH

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

Mystery Man.

THE unexpected decision of the Greek government in refusing to cooperate with the United States in detaining Samuel Insull for extradition is believed to have been very largely influenced by the will of Sir Basil Zaharoff. The munitions magnate and the public utility man were formerly associated in some hydro-electric deal.

No figure in modern times can compare with this man, born a Greek, with a Russian name, a British title and a French passport. Now he is known throughout the length and breadth of Europe as the owner of Monte Carlo, the man who overthrew the Monaco dynasty of Prince Radziwill and who now rules the gaming tables overlooking the blue Mediterranean.

In his youth he had been arrested and arraigned in Bow Street Court in London on charges of embezzlement preferred by his uncle. At that time the young man was known as Basileios Zacharias. In some mysterious fashion he was acquitted and turned up in the Balkans with a new name, Zaharoff and a new job, agent for the munitions firm of Nordenfeldt. He showered gold on the cafe tables of every capital in the Central and Balkan empires and secured so many arms orders that soon this slim, handsome Adonis dominated the affairs of Nordenfeldt.

It remained however, for an American to lay the foundations of the Zaharoff fortunes. This American was Hiram Maxim, inventor of the famous machine gun that bears his name. Maxim and Zaharoff made a partnership and soon the firm of Nordenfeldt, now dominated by the Greek and American, became formidable rival to Vickers, Ltd., the all-powerful munitions consortium in England.

Zarahoff about this time made the acquaintance of the beauteous Maria del Pilar Antonia Angela Patrocino Simona de Muquiera y Beruete, widow of the Duke of Marchena and who had after that married the Duke of Villafranca de los Caballeros.

The youthful Greek was as successful in love as he had been in business. However, he had to defer to the religious scruples of the duchess who declined to marry him on religious grounds until her then husband died. Zaharoff waited and waxed rich. The Spanish-American War, the Sino-Japanese War, the Boer War and finally the Great War showered upon him the dividends of great armaments. Lloyd George during the war made him a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath and Order of the British Empire; Clemenceau made him Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, a distinction that no victorious French general ever received. And when the war was over, and the rich flow of dividends had ceased, he was estimated to be worth more than five billion dollars. Banks, industries, newspapers were under his control. He gave one hundred millions to pay for the Greek offensive and in 1924 his two munitions companies announced they had lost six hundred million dollars through the Venizelos coups in the Near East. His beloved duchess finally became a widow and he married her after the war, but she caught pneumonia in Monte Carlo, in his empire, and died. And when he comes to die he will be buried with all the pomp and circumstance that French reserves for the selected few who are honored in life with the Grand Cross the Legion of Honor. He will be carried to his tomb on a gun carriage. The ironical end of a "merchant of death."

Diplomacy also has its "forgotten men." Has any one ever seen the Baron de Waha, listed in the diplomatic blue books as Minister from Luxembourg?

Melophiles.

THE diplomatic melomaniacs are marshalling for the beginning of the music season. All summer long they have been reduced to listening to music on the radio or from the victrola but now the concert era is at hand and they rejoice. When Maitre Hans Kindler raises his baton for the opening crash of the National Symphony Orchestra, he will warm the hearts of dozens of diplomats. Foremost in the front ranks on that date will be Count Szechenyi, the Hungarian Minister; Faik Konitza, the Minister from Albania; Sesostris Sidarouss Pasha, the Egyptian Minister; Tytus Filipowicz, the Ambassador from Poland; elegant Charles Davila, the Roumanian Minister. During the summer Minister Sidarouss was the guest of honor at an open air performance of Aida, which was written and composed by Verdi in honor of the Khedive. The Egyptian Minister has one of the most gifted musicians in the Diplomatic Corps in his secretary, Andre Cattaui, who plays the violin with rare feeling and distinction. Mr. Cattaui is a member of a string quartette which is occasionally augmented by a piano when Mme. Zaldumbide is able to join them. Mme. Zaldumbide is the wife of the Minister from Ecuador and was formerly a premier prix at the Paris Conservatoire.

Secretary van Hoorne of the Dutch Legation is famous for his cross-country hops in pursuit of a particular symphony. Once when he especially enamoured of Ravel's "Valse," he seriously asked permission from Minister van Royen to go to San Francisco to hear it. It so happened that that was the only place in the United States such a piece was to be played that year.

Roumanian Secretary George Boncesco is another fervid follower of the good music. He is a great friend of several artistes that come to Washington and frequently gives parties in their honor which are almost always enlivened by the presence of Hans Kindler, the dynamic conductor of Washington's symphony orchestra.

Portuguese Minister Viscount d'Alte is in a quandary. Former King Manuel of Portugal died recently in England. Should the diplomat honor the memory of his monarch by decreeing a formal mourning period or should the republican requirements of his government forbid it? The gracious gesture of the Portuguese authorities in sending a warship to escort the late king to the tomb of his ancestors, rather indicates that the minister will soon be observing the mourning, however.

Free List.

TO the list of immunities enjoyed by diplomats in the United States, the Department of State has just added another. This is freedom from a dozen or so vexatious "nuisance" taxes, which are usually exacted for stock transfers, telephone and telegraph charges, theater admissions, &c. The various embassies and legations received last week formal notice of their special dispensation from these taxes.

What puzzles many of the diplomats is the manner in which they may enjoy these reliefs. Since the State Department failed to indicate how they might avail themselves of these privileges, they are evidently presumed to present their diplomatic card every time they draw a check or make a long distance telephone call.

Many of the envoys will go on paying the usual rates plus tax just because they refused to be bothered.

Washington seems to be the stepping stone for rapid careers in the Italian diplomatic service. Leonardo Vitteti, the erudite First Secretary of the Embassy here a few years ago, is now Counselor of the Embassy in London under Dino Grandi. Count Marchetti, the counselor here, has just been transferred to Paris, although he will spend some time at the foreign office in Rome before going to his post. Is there a ministry in the offing for him?

City Occupation Tax Ends After 12 Years

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Although it took a 12-year battle, the Cincinnati city occupational tax finally has been wiped off the statute books by the city council.

The tax was adopted in 1919 to make up for revenues lost to the city when prohibition abolished saloons and saloon licenses.

The State Supreme Court first declared corporations exempt from the tax because the corporations already were taxed by the State, and that cut in half the $400,000 revenue to have been yielded this year by the tax.

Ruins Called Shrine Of John the Baptist

Pendick, Turkey, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Ruins of an ancient building, believed to be the shrine once harboring the truncated head of John the Baptist, are being brought to light in this Turkish village.

Pendik is the site of the Byzantine fortress-town Penteichon, where the head of St. John was kept during the reign of Emperor Valens, it having been brought to Constantinople by Theodosius the Great.

Greeks of Turkey yearly commemorate in this town August 29 as the date of the beheading of John.

Pure Liquor Sold in Original Packages Urged for Future

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Among the peoples who adopted the principles of prohibition, one group after another has abandoned the experiment, leaving the United States to face the alternative of repeal in some form, or of nullificaion of the Eighteenth Amendment. Which shall it be?

If the leaders of the so-called "drys" and, also, of the socalled "wets," together with leaders of the very large number of men and women who had high hopes that the Eighteenth Amendment would settle the liquor problem for this country, but who are disappointed of their hopes, because of the results of the twelve years' trial—if such leaders will cooperate in the formation of public sentiment which, in its influence, should be welcomed by the Congress, the way out of the present unhappy conditions may be found and pursued.

One result should be the conservation of the good which has been achieved through the eighteenth amendment, including the permanent abolition of the legalized liquor saloon. Another result should be the renewal of methods of reform through which men who resist the forces of law may yield to the power of persuasion for temperance and sobriety. Still another result should be the beginning of a movement to eliminate the unforeseen mistakes and misfortunes which have attended the eighteenth amendment and contributed to the impossibility of its adequate enforcement.

Are we too young or are we too old, as a nation, to learn something from the experience of other people? For example, we are assured by American testimony of a high order that the English liquor system is better than that of the United States. We are, also, assured of great reductions in the consumption of alcoholic beverages in England during the last twelve years, said to be brought about in part by the good quality of the liquor sold, and in part by restrictions on its sale. While we should have our own system, we may get good suggestions by studying other systems.

In the immediate future, public sentiment will be in the making, to the extent that constructive thinking is done; and when the time comes for constructive action, that action by our representatives at Washington may be influenced, more or less, by the previous straight thinking of the masses. Therefore, a careful study of the question is in order.

First, the enactment by Congress of a law providing for a pure alcoholic liquor, upon the same principle as the "pure food" law, every package to bear the proper declaration of its purity, and, also, to state the alcoholic content of the inclosed liquor.

Secondly, submission by the Congress to the States of a new constitutional amendment, for

(a) the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and

(b) that no alcoholic beverage shall be sold in the United States and the dependencies thereof that does not bear the proper official pure liquor label, and

(c) that all alcoholic beverages sold and delivered within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be sold and delivered in the original packages, which, in no case, shall be opened on the premises where the sales and deliveries are made.

Thirdly, when the amendment is adopted by three-quarters of the States acting in convention, as provided by the Constitution, each State shall provide its own alcoholic beverage legislation, subject, however, to the restrictions of the Constitution of the United States, as it will be at that time.

Enthusiasm Is Seen As Business Itch

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Enthusiasm is the biggest word in business today. Enthusiasm is the emblem of energy, not an epitaph of ended effort. Enthusiasm is business itch. Enthusiasm tells whether you are in a class or outclassed. It is "energy on the job." It predicts your position tomorrow. The man who lacks enthusiasm has paralysis of the think-tank. His place is in history. If you lack enthusiasm get out of the way, and let some fellow run who can show speed. Enthusiasm is what gets you home from third—the power that compels you to stick in the home stretch. It is the outside evidence of inside belief. It is the full interpretation of individual energy.

It proves that the backbone of business is right where it ought to be—in the individual. It creates a current in every contact. It makes a crusader of a man. The heart, mind, soul and body are all working overtime in the man with enthusiasm. Enthusiasm is the evidence that a man produces when he tries to justify his position as a "live wire." It is faith in yourself, in your party and in most men. The enthusiast can never exhaust his possibilities, because his enthusiasm constantly generates new power.

It is the maximum of manhood. Enthusiasm is absolute fidelity to little things, a firm grip on the cross of some high ideal. Think right, feel right, be right, "live and let live," do the square thing, have a conscience and use it, vote for Hoover and Curtis and the full Republican ticket. Let every Republican and independent voter buckle on the sword of righteousness and fight, and fight to win; don't stack arms until the polls close Tuesday, November 8. Let the Republicans show to the world that they stand behind the President in a world depression as well as in prosperity. Do not be led astray by populistic speeches and mushroom promises. They can not be fulfilled. Vote the ticket straight. Make your X at the head of the Republican ticket.

Repeal of 18th Amendment Seen as Increasing Jobless

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Antiprohibitionists argue that if the eighteenth amendment were repealed and the liquor traffic reinstated, it would benefit the economic condition of the United States by employing men and stimulating the circulation of money. Facts and figures prove this argument to be absurd.

The number of wage-earners employed in proportion to the amount of capital invested was much lower in the liquor industry than in any other industry. Whereas distilleries required 89 men for each $1,000,000 invested, breweries 78 men and wineries 68 men, clothing industries required 1,189 men for each $1,000,000 invested, car shops 1,184 men, shoe industry 892 men, knit goods 790 men, lumber products 591 men, and so on.

In the readjustment which followed the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, a factory replaced every distillery, brewery and winery, and a store replaced every saloon.

If the eighteenth amendment were repealed and the liquor traffic reinstated to the position it held in 1914, when it was at the maximum of its development, it would employ 62,363 brewery employes, 7,217 distillery employes, 2,254 winery employes, 1,982 malting employes, 15,620 employes in allied trades such as bottling and capping, and 409,465 bartenders or a total of 498,901.

It is estimated that the people of this country would spend $5,000,000,000 every year for alcoholic liquors. To do this they would have to spend $5,000,000,000 less every year for food, clothing, homes, automobiles, radios and the comforts of life. Present legitimate industries would have to decrease their production to the extent of $5,000,000,000 every year, or one-eighth, thus discharging one-eighth of our present wage-earners. Since the factory requires ten times as many employes as the brewery, the factories would have to discharge ten times as many men as the liquor industry could employ.

The liquor industry, unlike the vast majority of legitimate industries, does not benefit the industrial life of a nation. If a man buys liquor, it is consumed, and that is the end of the matter. But if a man buys an automobile, for example, it does benefit the related industries, for he then has to buy fuel and accessories to keep it in running condition. And each of these related industries, in turn, benefits its related industries. And so the spiral goes, contributing to the prosperity of the Nation.

In the liquor industry, labor was the lowest in the division of the value of the products which it created.

Whereas the liquor industry paid 7.6 per cent of the value of its products for labor, the fourteen leading industries of the United States paid an average of 22.6 per cent each. Consequently, the men who did the work would do so at lower wages, thus dragging down the American standard of living.

Nor is that the worst of the matter. It required five times more revenue for public care and attention to the indirect costs alone of the liquor traffic, such as vice, crime, labor disorders, accidents, insanity, degeneracy, paupers and orphans, than the total amount of revenue that the entire liquor traffic paid to the Governmment.

The liquor industry never did produce any wealth for society; it was always a burden to society. The repeal of the eighteenth amendment would not employ men, but increase unemployment. Consequently, it would retard the circulation of money and lower the depths of the present depression. The adoption of the eighteenth amendment did not cause a financial depression, and its repeal would not relieve one.

Protection Needed For Ox Tail Soup

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One important question which is being overlooked today by the American public is "What are we going to do about ox-tail soup when the supply of oxen runs out?" Did it ever occur to you that the supply is running low, very low, and that at the present rate of consumption the ox will be as fabled as the famous dodo? Did it ever occur to you that if we do not call a halt, and that if our National Congress does not throw a cordon of protective legislation around this animal, ox-tail soup will not grace the festal board of our leading hostelries? Let this sink deep in your mind: The only portions of the ox used for human consumption are the tail and the tongue. The tail is made into soup and the tongue is made into sandwiches. The carcass was never known to be used save as an advertisement for a political barbecue. According to scientific calculations, one tail is sufficient for six persons and the tongue for a like number.

Now, if it takes six persons to a tail, it can be easily assumed that it will take quite a herd to soup the epicureans of Washington for one week alone, and this has been going on for years, regardless of the diminishing supply. The only source we know of where this animal is propagated with any degree of success is within the environs of Annapolis. We understand there are a number of herds in New Jersey, but the farmers over there will not let them go on account of the mosquitoes.

If Congress provides no relief along this line, the next question arises, "What can be substituted?" The answer is, there can be no substitute. There is only one raw material for ox-tail soup, and that is the ox itself. The ox stands apart from all animals. The peculiarity of its situation, the menial tasks it performs and the meekness with which it carries its burdens tend to sweeten its disposition and produce a tail of rare flavor and exquisite quality. It therefore behooves us, one and all, to take heed before it is too late, and to preserve for all posterity this most delectable of all American dishes—ox-tail soup.

THE POOR MAN'S EXPLANATION

By EDGAR A. GUEST

The man was told the rate of pay
And understood that it was small,
But when the master turned away
He sat him down against a wall.

He sat him down and grumbled low
And nursed a grievance in his breast.
He let the minutes come and go

The master came and found him there,
Still idling in the noonday sun.
He paid him off and said: "I swear
With such a laggard I am done!

"What if the rate of pay was small?
With me a bargain fair you made.
Yet here you sit against the wall,
Proclaiming you are underpaid."

Now somewhere tramps a man about
Who tells to all with downcast glance:
"The reason I am down and out
Is I have never had a chance."

Land Annuities of Ireland Explained by Capital Group

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Kevin Barry Council, Washington, D. C., of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, again emphatically protests against the misstatements about the Irish situation that repeatedly appear in your columns.

In a note written in your office last week and added to a cable from London you say that the "land annuities payable to the Bank of England were provided for when the status of Ireland was settled in 1922. These payments were for land turned over to Irish farmers for the most part by British owners."

The first of these sentences is absolutely untrue. The second is grossly misleading. There was no vestige of any provision for such payments when "the status of Ireland was settled in 1922." The payment of the annuities was discontinued by an act of the British Parliament in 1920. The act is still in force. Payment was resumed surreptitiously by virtue of a secret agreement between the Cosgrave government of Ireland and the British administration, but this agreement was never ratified by the Dail, the Irish Legislature, and is utterly illegal and invalid.

The annuities were nominally in payment of lands relinquished under the old land purchase act. In reality these lands had been stolen from Irish owners and bestowed upon British royal favorites. The De Valera government might justly rest upon this fact objections to the continued payments. But it does not. It objects only because an act of the British Parliament had stopped them.

In a recent editorial setting forth your contemptuous view of an Irish republic, you say, "If it (meaning Ireland) wishes to risk economic disaster for the sake of gratifying Mr. de Valera's whims, that is the business of the Irish people."

Would you call the desire of the American colonists to be free a "whim" of George Washington? Would you refer to the passion of the Greeks to throw off the Turkish yoke as a "whim" of Bozzaris? Yet the struggle for Irish freedom, now in its last stage, far antedates these, goes deeper and has been illumined with greater sacrifices and more impressive deeds of heroism. If the Irish inspiration is a "whim," all liberty is a delusion, all truth a liar and nothing in life is worth while except to grab, to hold and to wallow.

You have been most unfair to the Irish cause since the accession of De Valera and his party to power. We ask you now to be good enough to restrain your animosity within the limits of facts. It is but fair that you publish this protest.

Liberal Legal Code Decreed for Poland

Warsaw, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Subject to amendments by parliament, a presidential decree has put into effect a new legal code for Poland designed to banish confusion caused by survival in various parts of the republic of old Russian, German and Austrian statutes. Because the new code liberalizes laws dealing with birth control there have been some strong protests from church sources.

Attila's Tomb" Sold"

Vienna, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—It isn't the city hall that is sold to gullible persons here; it's the grave of Attila, containing a great gold hoard which the Hun conqueror is supposed to have had when he died about 453 A. D. One recent "discoverer" of the grave sold it to a wealthy widow for $75,000.

Ills of Farmers Started Long Before Hoover Administration

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We hear much these days about farm mortgages, but receive little explanation as to how it happens and why it is much worse now than it was during previous epochs. We are faced with the appalling fact that we have terribly inflated farm mortgages during one of the worst periods of deflated farm produce prices. The only explanation we get from the uninformed or those who purposely mislead for political advantage is that the President is to blame for it all.

Taking up farm mortgages as they exist today in every part of the country, and especially in the Middle West, we find that the average is almost double what it was before the late war. The simple explanation is that inflated land prices immediately after the war is the primary cause. Land speculation initiated by the flambuoyant land agent of the Middle West started this false movement of inflation.

Not every farmer fell for the spread of the disease, but the hundreds of thousands who did, which, sad to say, included both seller and buyer, have long since mourned the day the spasm fostered itself upon the country.

Every agricultural economist of 50 years ago warned the farmer of the danger of land speculation, which means land values beyond the fair price of producing incomes. The farmer and the land agent are not alone to blame. Banks in agricultural areas must share their responsibility for this big mistake. As many as 300 banks failed in Iowa in one year, due invariably to their appetite for inflated farm mortgages. This was long before the stock market panic in 1929. The sad and lamentable joke turned out to be just about as hard on the farmer who sold as the farmer who bought. The farmer many times had to take back his farm with a first mortgage against it for more than it was worth in fair income from production.

Eastern life insurance companies loaned millions of dollars of policy holders' money on Eastern farms on inflated land prices. They are reaping the whirlwind now, with hundreds of farms they had to take over and other mortgages in the process of foreclosure. These same companies are now appealing to Uncle Sam with their sad story.

All this happened long before Herbert Hoover was elected President.

You might just as well blame the present administration for inflated land prices in 1920 and 1921 as to blame it now for deflated farm produce prices, while you are in the blaming business.

There is no better informed people in the world as a class than the Iowa farmer, considering the number of them, yet they must listen all through this campaign to the blatant political orator's insults to their intelligence.

Uses of Camphor

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For many years I have been an enthusiastic reader of your editorials. In The Washington Post of Friday, October 14, you have an article on camphor's decline. In the last sentence you state:

"There is little demand either for the genuine or artificial product, with the result that camphor today has fallen again into its original category as a medicine."

Apparently you have been misinformed in regard to the consumption of both the natural and synthetic camphor under present conditions, as both of these articles are important chemicals in our domestic trade.

If you are interested in further details on this situation I shall be very glad to give you information.

ROOSEVELT IS TOLD SENATE BEER PLANS

Robinson Says Republican Independents Would Be Included in Program.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—A disposition to deal favorably with Republican Independents in the Senate who support the national Democratic ticket, was outlined by Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, today at the Hyde Park home of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Talking in the long drawing room of the Roosevelt home shortly before he went picnicking with Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt, Robinson said he believed the national platform made necessary prompt modification of the Volstead act, and that he would join in cooperating to that end.

Discussing the Republican Independents who are joining in supporting the Democratic presidential nominee, Robinson said: "I don't see any occasion for penalizing anybody for supporting the national ticket . . ." Some important committee posts would be involved in any reorganization by the Democrats that would follow the election of a Democratic majority.

Robinson said he believed prompt action to permit the sale of beer would follow the success of the Democratic ticket.

"The only difficulty that I see would be in agreeing on the alcoholic content permissible under the Constitution," he said. "I regard that as one of the provisions of the platform that must be acted upon. It would be my disposition to cooperate in a move to that end. If the modification does not come in the short session, it would be possible, in the event of the election of a Democratic majority, after March 4. I have a conviction that we will have a majority in both Houses."

Democrats Plan For Vote Canvass

Dates for three Democratic precinct meetings in Takoma Park, Md., were announced yesterday by J. Bond Smith, president of the Roosevelt-Garner-Tydings-Lewis Club of Montgomery County, Md. The meetings will make plans for intensive house to house canvass of voters in Takoma Park precincts of the Wheaton election district.

The meetings will be held at Mr. Smith's residence, 7059 Eastern avenue, as follows: Ninth Precinst, Wednesday at 8 p. m.; Sixth Precinct, Thursday at 8 p. m., and Fourth Precinct, Friday at 8 p. m. A special Takoma Park rally will be held November 1 at Takoma Park Firehouse.

In his announcement, Mr. Smith points out that 201 Democrats were registered on the past two registration dates, October 4 and 11, while only 138 Republicans were registered. "These results in Takoma Park," he states, "speaks volumes for the most effective and thorough registration effort which has been put forth by all Democratic workers in Takoma Park. The fact that on the second registration day the Ninth Precinct registered more Democrats than Republicans also is most encouraging."

Mrs. Daugherty to Talk At G. O. P. Rally Here

Music will be provided by Mrs. Flora McGill Keefer and Harlan Randall.

Import Curb Urged On Manganese Ore

Oddie Urges Mills to Give Same Protection as That for Steel.

(Associated Press.)

Senator Oddie (Republican), Nevada, in a telegram from Reno, has urged Secretary Mills to invoke the antidumping act of 1921 against manganese ore imports from Russia, Brazil, British India and the Gold Coast of Africa.

Saying he was informed an antidumping order against steel products imported from Germany, Belgium, France and Luxembourg had been issued by the commissioner of customs on September 12, Oddie insisted there was sufficient evidence upon which to base an order against dumping of manganese ore.

"It is difficult for me to understand how an order can be issued at this time favoring the steel industry, while the manganese industry of the United States is even more in need of the same protection, and is subjected to more extreme conditions of foreign dumping in the United States," Oddie telegraphed Mills.

RELIEF CONFERENCE SET FOR THIS WEEK

15, the committee determined to limit all expenditures, regardless of need, "to the rate of $60,000 a month."

12 Cases Pointed Out.

Twelve cases were cited in the report to illustrate the desperate need; two of these, in brief, follow:

A mother of four children threatened to steal milk for her babies when the family's allowance was cut from $11.20 to $8.40 a week.

The allowance of a family of ten, including eight children ranging in age from 2 to 13 years, was cut from $14 to $8.40 a week.

Quoting from figures compiled by the Council of Social Agencies, the committee stated that expenditures for relief in Washington for the first eight months of 1932 amounted to $816,934, as against $313,932 for the same period in 1931, an increase of 160.2 per cent.

Washington's pay roll, exclusive of the Federal and District governments, have decreased as much as $327,000 in a single class of industry for a month as compared to 1931.

Sidney F. Taliaferro, former District Commissioner, is chairman of the committee which drafted the report.

Reminiscences of Alice Roosevelt Longworth

Views on Capital Social and Business Lobbies, Kinship With Democratic Nominee and Other Topics Are Given by Former "Princess" of the White House.

If Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth were not a Republican she would still vote for President Hoover because she believes that he deserves to be reelected and deserves the support of the people.

Thus does the daughter of the Rough Rider President sum up her views in the current political campaign, in an article in the Ladies' Home Journal, in which she narrates the story of her life.

To the widow of the late Speaker of the House, each presidential campaign bears an analogy to the story of the King of the Wood at Nemi, related in "The Golden Bough."

"That was a festival of renewal or replacement, and so is our performance. At Nemi the king was king for one year, at the end of which time a man was selected to go up to the holy grove and kill him—if he were able to. The survivor was king for the year following, when the act was put on again.

"In a measure we approximate the same symptoms and symbols, for when one hears the criticism that Hoover is responsible for bad times, it has just as much basis in reality as had the beliefs of our far off ancestors.

"If the crops were abundant and the hunting good, the king was a big magician, but if they were not, his was the fault. I don't doubt that the warriors and the witch doctors of the Ins and Outs battled and howled as our campaign orators do today."

"Princess Alice" good-humoredly refutes the story that she is a power in politics and she influences votes on legislation. This, she says, is a "curious and absurd legend without foundation in fact."

"The truth is that I have never in any single instance influenced a vote, and I and those who know me frequently wonder with considerable amusement how such a legend has come into being—how the reputation for having 'power' and 'influence' has been fastened to me."

In recent months, Mrs. Longworth says, many persons have congratulated her on the nomination of her "brother" as the Democratic presidential nominee. It is only fair, she says, that the confusion should be cleared away.

"Franklin Delano Roosevelt is my father's fourth cousin once removed and my fifth. Politically his branch of the family and ours have always been in different camps and the same surnames is about all we have in common. I can not believe that the voter has any illusion as to the degree of our kinship.

"I am a Republican, with a progressive tradition and inclination, and I am going to vote for Hoover. But, if I were not a Republican, I would still vote for Mr. Hoover this time. I say this, of course, without the least personal feeling against my fifth cousin."

Discussing her interest in public affairs, Mrs. Longworth says: "Obviously the daughter of a President and the wife of a Speaker of the House would be in contact with public affairs and it might be taken for granted that she would have an interest in what was a daily dish of the household, for, unlike business, politics is not left behind at the office.

"Automatically you pounce on the paper in the morning to see what the other fellow has to say—there is a program to be put through, a campaign in the offing, near or distant—always something that is grist for the political mill.

"In Washington where I have spent the greater part of 48 years, at least half the people one meets when one goes out are connected with the Government—in Congress, in the executive departments, or on one of the many boards or commissions—and it follows that the conversational vernacular is largely of public matters.

"There is concentrated talk on current legislation, an extraordinary degree of curiosity about appointments, and possibly considerable grinding of minor legislative and political axes; also a certain amount of flattery. One is solemnly consulted about something upon which one's opinion has no weight whatsoever. People naturally want to meet the personages of politics for whom there is always a great demand. Especially in recent years it has become the fashion to accumulate a few headliners to give kudos to one's parties."

The social lobby, Mrs. Longworth says, is another myth, describing it as the silliest term that has ever been invented for a nonexistent activity. One naturally associates with those who are in the same game—who have the same interests. The idea that hostesses are taming a radical or limbering a conservative is ridiculous. It all amounts to little more than the old sport of lion hunting.

However, real lobbies, in her opinion, are another matter. Mrs. Longworth does not believe there can be any legitimate opposition to industries maintaining representation in Washington to follow the legislation that is to them of vital importance, and to present and argue their cases for and against.

Business and politics should complement, not conflict, she believes. "They should go hand in hand instead of fist to jaw. They are wheels in the same machine."

However, when representation grows in the types of lobby such as oil, copper, lumber, veterans, &c., to logroll and intimidate Congress into passing class and sectional measures, for the benefit of the few, then it is a threat to the many.

MRS. ALICE ROOSEVELT LONGWORTH,

DRIVER SAYS HE GOT $10 TO BOOST G.O.P.

League Charges "Workman" Was Tutored in Radio Catechism.

Charges that one of the "workmen" who took part in a Republican campaign broadcast Friday night over Station WMAL was paid $10 to answer previously prepared questions which appeared to tell why he was in favor of President Hoover's reelection, were made last night by the National Progressive League.

To back the charges, the league, which supports Gov. Roosevelt, offers an affidavit signed by Carl Abeel, a taxi driver, who took part in the broadcast.

Abeel's story, according to the league, states that he was on his stand at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue last Wednesday night when he was approached by a man who said he was looking for workingman to broadcast a statement favorable to the President.

When told by the taxi drivers that there were no Hoover men there, the statement continued, the man offered $10 for the performance of such service. Abeel accepted, he said, was paid the money and went with the man to the Cosmos Club.

On arriving at the Cosmos Club, according to Abeel's story, the man, who had identified himself as Whiting Williams, and said that he could be reached by calling the White House and asking for French Strother, the President's literary secretary, prepared a typewritten paper of questions and answers.

According to the league's account, Abeel was rehearsed in the questions. On Friday night Abeel met Williams at WMAL and together with another man whom Abeel identified as a plumber the program was presented in the Republican campaign hour.

Abeel stated that Williams said he was touring the country getting other workingmen to broadcast in a similar manner for the President, according to the league.

HIGHLIGHTS ON TALK MADE BY PRESIDENT

whether there shall be placed in power over the destinies of 120,000,000 of people a party which so lacks a penetration into the forces active in the world, and the dangers and responsibilities that arise from them.

There should be no fear or apprehension at any deserving American fireside that starvation or cold will creep within their doors to menace families and loved ones over the forthcoming winter.

Day before yesterday my opponent announced a plan "to set up in times of prosperity what might be called a nest-egg to be used for public works in time of depression." * * * He advances this apparently as a brand new idea. Now it will doubtless surprise him to learn that the eggs have not only been laid, but have hatched.

Do you want to compete with laborers whose wages in his own money are only sufficient to buy from one-eighth to one-third of the amount of bread and butter which you can buy at the present rates of wages?

Publisher Asks Roosevelt For View on B. E. F. Eviction

John Callan O'Laughlin, publisher of the Army and Navy Journal, yesterday called upon Gov. Roosevelt to correct the "inference" that he disapproved the action of President Hoover in suppressing the bonus rioting in Washington last summer.

O'Laughlin addressed a telegram to the New York Governor asking that he "unequivocally" agree with the action taken by the President.

The full text of the telegram follows:

"As a citizen and as a veteran, I am amazed that you as an executive responsible for law and order and with the traditions of your name should permit the inference that you approve of the B. E. F. rioting in Washington and disapprove of the action of the President in suppressing it in upholding the power of the Federal Government and in protecting the health and property of the residents of the Nation's Capital.

"If the inference be unfair you should correct it by stating unequivocally that like the President you would preserve law and order, no matter by whom assailed and without regard to political consequence. Otherwise many who feel as I do will be ashamed for you."

Engineers Asked To Assist R. F. C.

37 Leaders in Various Districts Will Help Pass on Loans.

(Associated Press.)

The services of 37 prominent engineers were sought yesterday by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to assist in passing on applications for loans for self-liquidating construction projects. They were invited to serve in an advisory capacity. The announcement was made by Harvey Couch, a director.

The engineers in most cases are residents of the cities where the corporation's loan agencies with which they will cooperate are located. In the following list of Southern engineers invited, the city given represents both the residence and the site of the loan agency unless they are different:

F. H. McDonald, Atlanta; Oscar G. Thurlow, Birmingham; William S. Lee, Charlotte, N. C.; John B. Hawley, of Fort Worth, Dallas agency; Edward N. Noyes, Dallas; Robert J. Cummins, Houston; Gilbert A. Youngberg, Jacksonville, Fla.; Don A. MacCrea, Little Rock, Ark.; Bennett M. Brigman, Louisville, Ky.; Arthur J. Dyer, Nashville; Allen J. Saville, Richmond, Va.

Lutherans' Pension Work to Be Probed

Convention Orders Immediate Investigation of Board's Acts.

Philadelphia, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The spotlight of an official investigation was turned today upon the activities of the ministerial pensions and relief board of the United Lutheran Church in America.

Acting on a motion of State Senator Ellwood M. Rabenold, of New York, delegates to the eighth biennial convention of the church ordered that the inquiry be conducted by the investment commission, an advisory body, and directed that its findings be reported to the convention next Tuesday.

Dr. Charles J. Smith, president of Roanoke College, Salem, Va., urged that the investigation be undertaken at once and not left until after the convention adjourns. He declared the situation represented the "crystallization of rumors many of us have been hearing for some time."

"The integrity of one of the great boards of the church has been challenged," he said, "and it is the duty of the church to answer that challenge."

HEFLIN TO SUPPORT DEMOCRATIC TICKET

Birmingham, Ala., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—J. Thomas Heflin, former United States senator from Alabama, who campaigned against Al Smith four years ago and subsequently was barred from his party's primary, has volunteered to return to the Democratic fold and work for the election of Roosevelt and Garner.

Heflin wrote Jerome T. Fuller, chairman of the Alabama speakers' bureau, as follows in offering his services to the Democratic ticket:

"I have tendered my services as a speaker for Roosevelt and Garner to Director Jackson, of the national speakers' bureau, and to James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and to Judge Leon McCord, Democratic national committeeman for Alabama, and I now tender to you as chairman of the speakers' bureau in Alabama, my services as a speaker for the Democratic ticket—State and national."

Pleased Over Harmony.

Fuller, who managed the Democratic campaign in 1930 in which the independent ticket, headed by Heflin, was defeated, replied:

"I am sure we are all delighted to know that there is now harmony in the Democratic ranks and that we are all now pressing forward under the leadership of Roosevelt and Garner to a great Democratic victory, not only State, but national."

The former senator said in 1928 that he was not opposing his party but was fighting "rum and Tammany." He took the stump against the presidential ticket and Smith and Robinson carried this normally Democratic fort by less than 9,000 votes.

Under a rule adopted by the State executive committee in 1929 which barred as candidates all persons who failed to support the party's national ticket in the preceding general election, Heflin was excluded from the 1930 primaries. He went to court, but legal action failed to place his name and that of Judge Hugh A. Locke candidate for governor, on the ticket. Heflin then rallied his forces under the party emblem of "Jeffersonian Democrats" and waged an intensive campaign for reelection to the Senate.

Defeated by 50,000.

His ticket was defeated by more than 50,000 votes, but he contested the election, charging fraud and irregularity. The Senate seated Senator John H. Bankhead in Heflin's stead after a long investigation.

The Republican organization has not waged an active fight in Alabama this year, although that party has one of the largest tickets in the field it has advanced in many years.

The State issues in the general election center on constitutional amendments—one to provide for an income tax and the other for a $20,000,000 bond issue to amortize a deficit.

Mayor of Cumberland Is Marooned on Train

George Henderson, the mayor, climbed onto the rear platform of the train to greet the President. Before he got off, the train crew closed a safety fence, making it impossible for him to alight.

When members of the party discovered that he was still aboard as the train started, they frantically pulled the emergency signal rope to stop the train.

It made an unscheduled stop just outside the city to let the mayor off. Those on the train wondered whether he had to walk back to town.

Time Limit Nears On Absentee Votes

New York State Ballot Applications Must Be Made This Week.

Only six more days remain in which absentee voters in New York State may file applications for ballots, Samuel J. Prescott, chairman of the Republican State committee of the District, announced last night. The deadline is also nearing in several other States, he said.

New York voters should not fail to observe this warning, Mr. Prescott stated, because unless applications are received by county or city election boards by next Saturday, it will be impossible for residents of the State to vote by mail in the November election.

New York voters may obtain the blanks necessary to procure absentee ballots at the National Capital Republican Club, Sixteenth street and Scott Circle, Mr. Prescott said. Notaries on duty there will aid in filling out these forms.

Iowa Voters in Capital Register as Absentees

A great number of Iowa voters, resident in Washington, have taken advantage of the absentee law, W. G. Ladd, of Room 267, House Office Building, stated last night. Many have registered for the election already, he said.

All Iowa voters in the District were asked to secure ballot applications and registration blanks at his office.

HYDE LAUDS HOOVER IN LOUISVILLE TALK

Better Day Is Just Ahead, He Says in Urging Reelection of President.

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Prediction that "the first faint dawnings of a better day" are in sight and a plea that President Hoover be reelected to carry on his work were made by Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde in an address at a Republican rally here tonight.

The Secretary of Agriculture and Maurice H. Thatcher, Republican candidate for the Senate, were the speakers at the meeting.

Mr. Hyde devoted much of his address, released in advance by Republican headquarters, to praise of the present tariff law and to denial of Democratic claims that it injured the farmer. He said the Hawley-Smoot tariff act and the Farm Board had saved prices of American farm products from dropping much lower than they are.

Declared Misinterpreted.

Turning to President Hoover, he said the American people cannot afford to lose his guidance during the present times, because, he said, "under his leadership your country has weathered the storm with fewer shocks and with less social disturbance than any other nation of the world." He said Hoover had been more "maligned, misrepresented and misinterpreted" than any President since Lincoln.

Mr. Hyde said the story of the school for mountain children established near the President's Virginia mountain camp "explains Herbert Hoover better than a volume could do it." He said he was present several years ago when a mountain lad, Ray McKinley, came to the camp with a live 'possum and during the conversation with the President and Mrs. Hoover, it developed that neither the boy nor other nearby mountain children had a school to attend.

Cast in Different Mold.

"Other men would have rushed into the newspapers with a fervid expression of symphathy for the mountain folk. Others would have variously expressed their feelings and then have forgotten. None of them would have accomplished anything. Herbert Hoover was cast in a different mold. He said nothing, either then or later. But one year later, there was a modern school house on the mountain, and in it was a competent teacher. Also in it were Ray McKinley and the other lads and lassies of the mountainside. That's the way Hoover works."

CZAR'S MAN STAYS ON DUTY IN SEATTLE

Seattle, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Embittered, but still defiant of the forces that overthrew his beloved ruler, a lone emissary of the once powerful czar of all the Russias still holds forth in Seattle.

Fifteen years have passed since the czar and all he stood for fell before the revolution's onslaught, but Nicholas Bolgolanientsky remains as consul general in Seattle to his imperial highness. A vice consul in New York City and he are the only diplomatic representatives, he states, of the deposed czar still serving the interests of their slain leader in the United States.

It was eighteen years ago that Nicholas Bolgolanientsky stood in old St. Petersburg, now Leningrad, and watched the gay activities of the czar's court before he departed for Seattle to continue a brilliant career in his master's service.

Source of Funds Secret.

America held greater promise, after his long service in Manchuria. Most of his relatives and friends later met death at the hands of revolutionists, but Bolgolanientsky still retains the flash of his background.

Severe and grim, his office is three floors up and back to the end of the hall, guarded by one approach—directly down the hall.

"Why are you still here?" he was asked.

Bolgolanientsky bristled and glared, answering the query with one of his own about the interviewer's beliefs on communism.

"Who pays the expenses of your office?" he was asked.

"That's a private secret," he protested vehemently, then thundered at his questioner as he rose from his chair: "Go!"

Czar's Money in America.

But Bolgolanientsky changed, softly requesting his inquirer to sit down, while he explained statement of the United States Government which said that the consuls of Russia were presumed to represent a nation of people despite the overthrow of the imperial government.

Expenses? That remained a secret, but, he protested, "the Communists do not furnish it."

Old clippings he showed, however, tended to show there was imperial Russian money in large amounts deposited in the United States when the czar was overthrown and death raked the nation. Nicholas Bolgolanientsky wouldn't say whether consuls received some of this.

He's 52 years old now, and has been in the czar's service for 30 years, 18 of them in Seattle. His wife and daughter died here. To him Seattle is home.

Letters Explaining Gas Charges Asked of Firm

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday suggested in a letter to the Washington Gas Light Co. that the "maximum use charge" in gas heating rates be explained in form letters to be sent all subscribers to this service. Numerous complaints have been received by the commission as to this charge, it was explained, although it is considered just by the utilities body.

The commission suggested that the gas company explain that the charge is necessary to pay for the extra facilities needed to provide adequate gas service at peak periods and that it is prorated according to the extent of facilities and gas used by consumers.

ENTRY SPEED URGED IN HALLOWEEN FETE

Chairman Shipe Says Entrants Should Lose No Time in Registering.

Prospective entrants in the Halloween parade October 31 were urged to expedite their registration for the event by A. K. Shipe, general chairman of the Washington Bicentennial Halloween Celebration committee.

Mr. Shipe, who was chairman of last year's committee in charge of the event, said that entries were being received more rapidly than last year, but urged even greater expedition.

"Many persons were kept out of the 1931 celebration," said Mr. Shipe, "because they did not begin their preparations in time. We know of a number of organizations that tried to enter the parade then but in the short time at their disposal could not build their floats."

Indications are, however, said Mr. Shipe, that the parade will be much larger and more impressive this year. He said he hopes for a larger representation of various sections and groups of the city than last year.

Entries are being received at the Greater National Capital Committee headquarters at 204 Star Building. Entry blanks may also be obtained there.

Attention was redirected by Mr. Shipe to the available help of Harold Snyder, of the Community Center, in planning floats for the parade. Mr. Snyder, he said, is available in the Community Center headquarters at the Franklin School building on Tuesdays and Fridays for the next three weeks.

MT. RAINIER PARADE CELEBRATES PAVING

With a colorful parade, in which most of the watchers knew most of the paraders, Mount Rainier, Md., yesterday started celebrating the finish of its street paving program, ending the festival with street dancing after a banquet last night.

Local and State officials in automobiles and marching school children, fire departments and fraternal organizations, made up the line which paraded up one side of the newly finished Rhode Island avenue and down the other. At the end of the marching, Senator Tydings and Representative Gambrill complimented the town on its achievement.

"Any improvement Maryland can make helps the prestige of Washington," Senator Tydings said. But he reminded the crowd of about 500 that many municipal problems remain to be worked out, although expressing the hope that they would meet again soon to dedicate further improvements. One of these, he said, would be the extension of Rhode Island avenue to Hyattsville, making it a link in the main North-South highway.

Recalls Olden Days.

Representative Gambrill recalled the time when Mount Rainier was only a farming community, and said he remembered when J. Enos Ray drove an ox cart to market. Others who spoke at the conclusion of the parade were Bird H. Dolby, chairman of the celebration committee; Maj. E. Brooke Lee, of the State roads commission; Mr. Ray, marshal of the parade; Mayor John H. Beall and former Mayor Kenneth Bovay.

Speakers at the banquet included E. G. Siexers, Forrest Blunt, State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, Charles B. Calvert, Washington Irving Cleveland, and other former mayors of the town, with Dr. Harry Nalley as toastmaster. The dinner ended with public dancing on Rhode Island avenue to the old-fashioned tempo of a mountain orchestra.

Groups In Parade.

In the parade were State, county and District police, the Barbara Frietchie Council of the Daughters of America, fire departments of Mount Rainier, Brentwood, Cottage City and Riverdale.

The Junior Order of American Mechanics, carrying the world's largest flag, so big it had to be folded back to be carried through the street; present and former officials of the town, the Maryland Patriotic Band, Strawn-Turner and Defense Posts of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Farmer-Snyder and Bunker Hill Posts of the American Legion, the Overseas Band and Drum Corps, Maryland and District troops of the Boy and Girl Scouts, children of the public and parochial schools, including a "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" by pupils of the Brentwood School.

Also Job's Daughters, Bethel, No. 10, Daughters of America, the Ladies Civic League, the Mount Rainier-Brentwood Boys Club, the National Training School Band, the Woodridge-Brookland Business Men's Club, with a clown, and the Mount Rainier business men.

Ready readers await the offers in Post Classified Ads, the first thing in the morning.

BRENTWOOD PUPILS TAKE PART IN PARADE

"The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" was reenacted yesterday by these Brentwood School children marching in the parade in Mount Rainier, Md., which celebrated the completion of the town's street paving program. Children of other schools, town officials, civic, fraternal and veterans' organizations were also in the line of march which led along Rhode Island avenue. Senator Millard E. Tydings and Representative Gambrill were featured speakers.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF CHAMBER TOLD

Harry King, Retiring Chief, Says Members Obtain More Returns.

Money invested by members of the Washington Chamber of Commerce in the organization has brought them more returns this year than ever before, Harry King, retiring president of the chamber, declared in his annual report last night, given in the form of a radio address over Station WMAL.

Accomplishments of the organization during the year listed by Mr. King include: An exceptional record in securing conventions; production of the bicentennial talking picture, "Washington, the Man and the Capital;" publication of a Bicentennial handbook advertising Washington, and distribution of a Washington school directory.

The Chamber of Commerce was the first local civic body to indorse the plan for a governmental agency, financed by taxation, to handle unemployment relief cases, Mr. King said.

The chamber was instrumental in obtaining full reciprocity for District motor cars and trucks operating in Virginia, he reported. Enactment of the District parole law marks the culmination of a movement started two years ago by the organization, he announced.

Elimination of the retroactive feature in increased rates in workmen's compensation insurance, which saved $300,000 to the 14,000 Washington business firms whose employes are covered by this form of insurance, was due to action by the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. King said.

Recommendations of the chamber's committee on transportation for solution of the taxicab problem are being applied with increasing success by the Public Utilities Commission of the District, and the Save a Life Campaign to be launched here next month was first advocated by the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. King said.

Mr. King will relinquish his office at the twenty-fifth annual meeting of the chamber Tuesday night, at the Mayflower Hotel. The board of directors of the chamber will tender him a testimonial luncheon on the same day. Mr. King has been president two years, the limit allowed by the chamber.

The meeting is called to place before the board members of the various organizations vital facts in connection with the coming campaign of the Community Chest, which will be held November 14-23, inclusive.

A musical program will be furnished by the Little Symphony Orchestra of the Jewish Community Center and members of the glee clubs of the Y. W. C. A. A silver cup will be presented to the organization with the largest percentage of its board members present.

Brief addresses regarding the vital problems which are faced by the Community Chest and all of its member agencies for the coming winter and which must be handled in the forthcoming campaign, will be made by E. C. Graham, president of the Community Chest; Newbold Noyes, campaign chairman; and Elwood Street, director of the Chest.

Other Leaders to Speak.

Leading board members will contribute brief statements as to ways in which board members of member agencies may help in meeting the situation, both by word of mouth publicity in regard to the Chest and its work and by participating in the campaign.

Coleman Jennings will talk on family welfare; Mrs. Whitman Cross will discuss health; Mrs. David Meade Lea will speak on children's agencies; Rayford W. Logan will discuss the character building agencies, and Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith will speak on homes for the aged.

Morris Edwards, vice chairman of the Community Chest speakers' bureau, will outline plans to further the interests of the coming campaign.

Clarence A. Aspinwall, chairman of the special gifts unit of the Community Chest campaign committee, has completed his selection of team captains for the 1933 campaign, according to a report made yesterday to Newbold Noyes, campaign chairman.

Seven Teams to Work.

Mr. Aspinwall has perfected a new arrangement for this unit this year, whereby only seven teams will be in the field, one of which will be in charge of the unit chairman. Team captains assisting Mr. Aspinwall will be Mrs. William J. Flather, Mrs. C. C. Glover, jr., Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, Coleman Jennings, George Hewitt Myers and Charles Carroll Morgan.

The opening meeting of team captains and workers will be held at the Mayflower Hotel, November 9, when instructions to workers will be given and preparations for the campaign made.

The special gifts unit will conduct its campaign this year simultaneously with that of the other units in the campaign group, instead of working ten days in advance as has heretofore been the custom.

Police Plan Drive For Traffic Safety

Five Men Will Be Added to Motorcycle Squad to Reduce Accidents.

Five additional policemen will be mounted on motorcycles in an attempt to curb the increasing number of traffic fatalities, according to Inspector E. W. Brown, assistant superintendent of police, in command of the Traffic Bureau.

An intensive drive against speeders and reckless drivers will be carried on by all members of the force, Inspector Brown said yesterday. A total of eleven deaths during the last month in traffic cases was much too high, he asserted. Numerous complaints received about taxicab drivers are to be investigated as a part of the drive.

A squad of four motorcycle men will be detailed under the direct suprvision of Brig. Gen. Pelham D. Glassford, superintendent of police, Inspector Brown said.

WAY PAVED TO PUSH LEE ROAD EXTENSION

ARLINGTON COUNTY
BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Extension of the Lee boulevard from Lyon Park to the south wall of the Arlington National Cemetery may be made possible at a special meeting of the county board October 25. County Manager Roy S. Braden stated that at that time the question of needed rights of way will be considered.

The calling of this special meeting came through a request from Ashton C. Jones, former president of the Arlington County Chamber of Commerce and one who has for four years worked to see the completion of the boulevard through the county from the Arlington Memorial Bridge.

Having returned from Richmond yesterday, where he went to purchase road equipment, County Manager Braden stated that he will complete the contract for road machinery tomorrow. Braden said that the purchase is being made at this time to put all roads in shape before winter sets in.

The board unanimously sustained the action of the board of zoning appeals in refusing to grant the request of Walter F. McCanless for a rezoning of his property to commercial that he might establish a coal yard. Attorney Amos C. Crounse, appearing as counsel for McCanless, notified the board that he would take the matter before the circuit court.

The board went on record as unalterably opposed to the bill now before Congress providing for the leasing for a term of years with a provision for purchase for the municipal airport of the property south of the Highway Bridge by the District of Columbia.

It was pointed out that the county derives more tax revenue from this property than any other in the county and with the passage of this bill stands to be a great loser in tax revenue. It was voted that members in Congress from this section be advised of the board's action and to support it by defeating the bill.

The board issued a warning to residents of the county against the spreading of ashes on the county roads. The county will collect all ashes in accordance with the schedule out some time ago, providing they are placed in suitable containers.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

A carload of Red Cross flour from the Government will be distributed to the city's poor beginning tomorrow. Headquarters will be established at the George Mason Hotel, where tickets will be distributed to persons who satisfy the officials in charge that they are worthy and the tickets will be redeemed at grocery stores whose owners have agreed to distribute the flour from their warehouses.

Albert V. Bryan, local Red Cross chairman, also announced yesterday that 11,000 yards of cotton material is expected by the local Red Cross Chapter, which will be distributed to the city's needy after it has been converted into garments by the local school children.

Ninety-seven names are on the ballots for the presidential election, which were printed for the local election board yesterday.

Two hundred delegates will attend the annual convention of the Virginia Real Estate Association in Alexandria, which begins Thursday. The business meeting will be held in the George Mason Hotel. An attractive program of entertainment has been arranged by the Alexandria, Arlington and Fairfax Real Estate Board, which is host to the association.

Jerry Woolfolk, 21, and his father, Harry Woolfolk, of Woodford, Va., were injured yesterday afternoon when the motorcycle on which they were riding collided with a motorcycle driven by Sergt. Anthony Besters, of Fort Humphreys. Both received broken legs and Jerry Woolfolk suffered a broken finger.

Beginning tomorrow, the sessions of the Alexandria Police Court will begin at 9:30 a. m. instead of at 9 as now. The change was made by Judge W. S. Snow in order to enable policemen who have cases in court to do traffic duty at the public schools until after the classes convene.

Dr. Thomas B. Cochran was elected commander of the James E. King Post, United Spanish War Veterans, at the organization meeting last night at the George Mason Hotel. Other officers are Richard Mumford, vice commander; Lewis Armistead, adjutant, and Walter P. Kerrick, quartermaster.

Cooper, of South Carolina; E. Barrett Prettyman and Jo V. Morgan. John E. Oxley will preside. The committee in charge includes William L. Aud, Harry M. Williams and Robert G. Gray.

Stuart Reeder, of Leonardtown, director for the Southern Maryland District. Other State officials and legionnaires of Maryland and the District of Columbia will be among the guests.

SEVERAL MENTIONED FOR JUDGESHIP POST

Judge Woodward Prominent in List as Successor to Judge Peter.

Speculation is rife in Montgomery County, Md., regarding the probable successor of Judge Robert B. Peter, as judge of the Montgomery County Circuit Court. Judge Peter has announced his intention of resigning as soon as he can complete matters now before him in order to take a much needed rest.

Among those prominently mentioned for the appointment are Judge Charles W. Woodward, now judge of the county police court; J. Bond Smith, of Takoma Park, Md., counsel for the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission and well known in county Democratic circles; Albert M. Bouic, Rockville attorney; State's Attorney Stedman Prescott; Capt. Joseph C. Cissel, member of counsel to the county commissioners; Judge R. Granville Curry, of the juvenile court.

Judge Woodward appears to have the edge in the informal discussion by attorneys and laymen regarding the appointment. The general sentiment appears to be that he would be acceptable to all factions in the county. The judge has made an enviable reputations for himself as judge of the county police court, which tops a former reputation as a member of the law firm of Woodward & Cissel, counsel to the county commissioners until the appointment of Judge Woodward to the police court bench.

Prescott Is Mentioned.

General sentiment appears to pick Stedman Prescott, now State's attorney, as successor to Judge Woodward in police court if the latter is appointed by Gov. Ritchie.

On the other hand, J. Bond Smith is known to be a favorite of the present administration and his ability as a lawyer is unquestioned, having been demonstrated in many legal battles.

Albert M. Bouic, whose ability has been demonstrated many times in courtroom skirmishes, probably would be the leading contender were it not for his political affiliations. He has been recognized as the leader of the antiorganization Democratic faction for years.

Judge Curry is not so well known in the county, but his ability is granted. His comparatively recent emergence into the limelight in the county probably would militate against his chances.

Capt. Cissel Prominent.

Capt. Cissel also has risen into the ranks of the leading lawyers of the county in recent years, and is not to be lightly disregarded in the making of the appointments.

Judge Peter's successor is sure to be a Democrat. He will serve for two years until the general county and State election, when the judgeship will be placed on the general ticket for the full fifteen-year term.

Appointment of a second judge for the court, much needed to care for the heavy docket of recent years, must wait at least six years. The new position must be proposed at the next session of the Legislature, and then voted on in the general election of 1934, following which the office will have to be placed on the ticket in the 1938 election.

YORKTOWN READIED FOR SURRENDER DAY

Many Improvements Made in Colonial National Monument.

Yorktown, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Visitors to Yorktown's celebration of "surrender day" next Wednesday will see the results of many improvements made in the Colonial National Monument since the observance of the sesquicentennial celebration here a year ago.

Historic Moore House, in which the British, French and American commissioners met on October 18, 1781, to draft the articles of surrender, was opened as a national shrine July 1. The interior and exterior of the house have been reconditioned in colonial style. The surrender room has been partially furnished with antique furniture of the Revolutionary period and a historical museum has been installed in other rooms.

Another building owned by the National Park Service is the old Yorktown Hotel, sometimes called the Lightfoot House, and now headquarters for the Colonial National Monument. This building has also been recently reconditioned. An interesting exhibit of geological specimens from the Yorktown cliffs is on display.

Under the direction of the Historians of Colonial National Monument the Yorktown battlefield has been marked by 38 roadside markers, giving historical information regarding the siege of Yorktown. The Confederate fortifications occupying approximately the same grounds as the British trenches in 1781 also have been identified and marked. The celebration marking the 151st anniversary of the allied American and French victory over Cornwallis' troops is under the joint auspices of the Colonial National Monument of the National Park Service, the citizens of Yorktown, the Comte de Grasse Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, the Thomas Nelson, Jr., Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution, and the Virginia George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

County chairmen will be appointed at an early date, Senator Wicker said. Among the members of the committee, each of whom has accepted his appointment, are Raymond Sisson, Warsaw; Greenlee D. Letcher, Lexington; R. H. Perry, Charlottesville; M. J. Menefee, Luray; Charles E. Reams, Culpeper, and Ellis F. Hargis, Lebanon.

The applications are from Chimney Villa on the Lee highway near Falls Church; George W. The board will also consider applications for permits to establish seven commercial hog farms in various sections of the county.

BUDGET PREPARED FOR FALLS CHURCH

Tax Rate Would Stay Same Under Plan Submitted to Town Council.

The finance committee of the town of Falls Church, Va., has prepared a budget for the consideration of the town council for the ensuing year. On this budget the tax rate for the corporation will be based. A program outlined by the road committee to hard surface town streets, will keep the tax rate the same as last year, $1.10 on the $100 assessed valuation. A school tax of 35 cents was also levied.

The budget outline showed the estimated receipts would be $28,122.12, which was divided as follows: Cash balance, $2,017.53; general taxes, $16,500; school bonds, $5,250; balance due on sidewalk and curbing, $1,204.59; licenses, permits, &c., $150, and miscellaneous, such as fines and trial costs in Mayor's Court, $3,000.

The expenditures estimated for the year ending August 31, 1933, will total $28,100, of which the fund for roads and public works will be $8,300. Schools will come next with $3,500; interest on outstanding school bonds, $3,266.50; repayment of a loan from the town water system, $4,000; salary of town sergeant, $1,500; street lights, $1,260; school bond retirement, $1,000; school bond sinking fund, $983.50; salary, town clerk, $480; interest on loans, $350; salary of superintendent of public works, $360; town library, $300; mayor's fund, $200, and emergency police, $200.

The budget for the municipal water system was not included in the finance committee's report, but they recommended that one be submitted by the water committe. No fire protection levy was made this year because one had been levied by the county prior to the new law authorizing the levy by the corporation. The fire department's estimate for next year had not been submitted to the council by the department officials and nothing was included to assist the local volunteer department.

Directories of Lowest Merchandise PRICES . . . and the Directory of VALUES

I DON'T BOTHER READING ADS—I JUST LOOK AT THE PRICES

THE past few years have been a period of falling price levels during which articles of known quality and dependable value have reached unprecedented low levels. Frequent changes have focused public attention upon price, and, now that equitable price levels have been established for dependable merchandise, many merchants and manufacturers continue to capitalize upon the interest in price figures by offering merchandise of cheaper quality, cheaper workmanship and less intrinsic value.

The sale of "shoddy" goods—merchandise produced and sold to meet price competition alone—is today's chief obstacle to the return of normal business conditions, and the practice is encouraged by the selection of advertising mediums in which THIS METHOD MUST BE FOLLOWED!

Every merchant knows that some advertising mediums receive the prospective customer's attention merely because they are DIRECTORIES OF LOWEST MERCHANDISE PRICES . . . When he employs such a medium he MUST cater to the demands of its readers by featuring his lowest price figures—and his advertising investment is invariably lost if those figures do not compare favorably with his competitors; even though the character of his offerings may be superior.

The advertiser must view the situation in this light; either he is to sell upon the exclusive basis of price competition—in which case he will choose the medium which is read because it is a "directory of lowest merchandise prices"—or he is going to sell quality merchandise at the fair price warranted by the superior satisfaction it will give to his customers.

In the latter instance he will seek an advertising medium which is selected by the reader because of its intrinsic value—not because the reader wishes to use it as a criterion of cheap price.

The Washington Post is published, purchased and read, as a NEWSpaper! The reader therefore views its advertising copy in a different frame of mind—with the desire to learn of new features in style, improvements in merchandise character, the latest achievements of science and invention as reflected in labor saving devices, foods and other merchandise—with a mind receptive to new ideas, interested in merchandising NEWS.

Under these conditions the merchant has a far greater opportunity to present the merits of his goods or service—to sell them upon the basis of genuine VALUE rather than upon the fallacy of PRICE. In addition, The Washington Post offers him a selected audience of the families who do the bulk of the buying in Washington's retail stores; the families who have the means to gratify their normal desire for quality and the intelligence to realize that "you can't get something for nothing."

Because The Washington Post appeals to a discriminating readership it has also attracted the city's most dependable retail stores as its advertising clientele and has become A DIRECTORY OF VALUE instead of a compendium of low price. As such it offers the merchant a real opportunity to build his business upon the solid rock of customer satisfaction instead of upon the shifting sands of price competition . . . An opportunity to establish relations with CUSTOMERS instead of with "Bargain Hunters" who buy here today and there tomorrow—guided by the solitary beacon of price.

M WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1932.

BRITAIN'S TREASURY CONDITION DICTATES CARE MUST BE USED

SEPTEMBER'S DEFICIT IS UNDER THAT OF 1931

Promptness of Income Tax Payments Will Determine Final State.

London, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Details of England's revenue and expenditure for the first half of the financial year indicate that the British treasury will have to walk very carefully the last half.

While treasury returns show the main items of revenue "fairly satisfactory," the general budgetary position, especially expenditure, will call for careful scrutiny if ends are to meet or come near it next March.

The total floating debt outstanding on September 30 was 885,980,000 pounds (about $3,100,000,000 at current exchange), an increase of 251,573,000 pounds compared with a year ago, and an increase of 274,025,000 pounds since last March 31.

Revenue in the half year amounted to 266,528,308 pounds (about $939,849,000), an increase of 5,061,886 pounds over the same period last year. Ordinary expenditure and sinking fund totaled 372,636,773 pounds (about $1,304,228,600) a decrease of 9,006,324 pounds.

Comparison of Deficit.

There was thus a current deficit on September 30 of 104,108,465 pounds (about $364,379,000) compared with 118,176,655 pounds of a year ago, when the national finances were overhauled by an emergency budget.

Only about a third of the year's revenue is normally collected in the first six months, and the returns may not be a sure guide to the year's results. However, a superhuman effort was put forth to pull all income taxes in early, and a prediction that something of the kind may be urged on Britons next year doesn't seem unfounded.

The revenue total is held to be in accord with budget anticipations, but there is no optimism in view of the fact that the general trade situation remains unsatisfactory.

What the budgetary position will be next March depends in a large measure upon the promptness with which the income taxpayer meets his January installment.

Estate Duties Increase.

Estate duties are a little, and stamp duties considerably below estimates. Estate duties show an increase of £4,550,000 toward the anticipated increase of £11,000,000 during the whole year. Stamp taxes are only up £380,000 in the half-year. The budget estimated an increase of £5,930,000 in the twelve months.

Customs revenue, which includes the new tariffs, doesn't seem to justify the budget expectations. It shows an increase of £17,393,000 in the six months. The estimate provided for a year's increase of £38,418,000.

Income tax	47,341,000	Decrease	6,158,000
Surtax	10,650,000	Decrease	5,240,000
Estate duties	39,030,000	Decrease	4,550,000
Stamp taxes	6,780,000	Increase	380,000
Land tax, &c.	160,000	Decrease	20,000
Customs	82,360,000	Increase	17,393,000
Excise	60,500,000	Increase	3,900,000
Auto taxes	1,167,000	Decrease	39,000
Post-office	6,050,000	Decrease	500,000
Crown lands	600,000	Decrease	20,000
Sundry loans	3,236,047	Decrease	8,847,751
Miscl.	10,674,261	Increase	3,563,617
Total	268,528,308	Net Increase	5,061,866

Details of Expenditures.

Some tightening of government expenditures seems clearly indicated. Civil expenditures show an increase of 12,270,982 pounds in the six months. Budget estimates provided for only 10,920,000 pounds increase for the entire year. The defense services kept within their estimates.

The reduction of over 9,000,000 pounds in total expenditures is largely due to the fact that payments into the sinking fund are behind those of a year ago.

National debt interest and management	138,102,483	Decreas	12,006,376
Payments to Northern Ireland exchequer	2,907,886	Increase	338,526
Other consolidated fund services	1,108,535	Increase	27,367
Army, Navy, Air	51,360,000	Decrease	3,050,000
Civil and revenue appropriations	165,978,286	Increase	12,270,982
Total ordinary expenditure	359,457,190	Net decrease	2,419,501
Total expenditure	372,636,773	Net decrease	9,006,324

Military Surgeons Elect Washingtonians to Office

Hartford, Conn., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Col. A. E. Lord, surgeon of the Illinois National Guard, Plano, Ill., was elected fourth vice president of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States today. Asst. Surg. Gen. R. C. Williams, of the United States Public Health Service, Washington, D. C., succeeded Col. Charles W. Comfort, jr., of New Haven, as president.

Other officers are: Commander William Seaman Bainbridge, U. S. Naval Reserve, New York, first vice president; Medical Director Charles M. Griffith, of the United States Veterans' Administration, Washington, second vice president; Capt. C. M. Oman, United States Navy, Annapolis, Md., and Brig. Gen. Jefferson R. Kean, Washington, secretary-treasurer and editor.

Around the Town

WASHINGTONIANS who do not happen to live in the territory bounded by Columbia road, Calvert street, Connecticut avenue and Park road have no idea of the disturbance which can be caused by one fire alarm in or around that section. Every one knows that the fire trucks, sirens wailing and bells ringing, create considerable din as they rush to the blaze but it is after effects which concern residents of this area.

For as soon as the first siren is heard across the valley of Rock Creek Park and the National Zoo, the inmates of the latter place take up the chorus. From the lion house comes the heavy roar of the king of beasts, picked up immediately by the Bengal tiger. The shrill cries of monkeys follow. Then down to the pits where the coyotes, wolves and foxes are confined. The uproar grows rapidly and continues in full force until the last "clang" of the fire bells and the last "wail" of the sirens has died away. And then the neighborhood goes back to its normal routine.

Clocks in church steeples are not uncommon but one of the first churches to have a clock inside the auditorium is St. Matthew's Roman Catholic Church on Rhode Island avenue. It is in keeping with the elaborate decorations of the church and may be seen from any portion of the main part of the edifice.

DEAN POUND, head of the Harvard Law Sschool, here for the American Bar Association's convention, is responsible for this one. The Wickersham Commission hired a statistician. A mass of data was placed before the "expert," who promptly asked, "What do you want to prove?"

Astounded, the members of the commission replied that the finding would have to be established by the figures offered.

"I refuse to undertake the job unless I know what you want to prove," said the statistician. "Tell me what you want to prove and I can prove it with these figures."

Rain or shine, Chief Justice Hughes is out twice a day, morning and evening, for a long walk. Frequently he is accompanied by Mrs. Hughes. The Chief Justice is a great adherent of walking, being seldom seen in an automobile.

THERE was an embarrassing moment during a recent interview with Washington correspondents granted by Lord Reading. "What do you want me to do?" Lord Reading graciously inquired of the press.

"Talk about debts," replied one zealous correspondent.

There was a moment's pause until the reporter tactfully changed his topic to "economic crises" and "disarmament prospects."

It was noticeable at the next day's interview with M. Paul Reynaud, of France, that the former French minister of justice also was questioned on "economics" and "prospects for world peace."

The late Chief Justice William Howard Taft was once asked what entertainment he wanted at a banquet in New York. "George O'Connor," Mr. Taft replied, being a fan for the Washington tenor. George sang at the banquet and afterward went to the Lambs Club. A member there inquired, "Who is this George O'Connor," to which this reply was given: "The man to whom New York is just a one-night stand."

IN the old days when campaigns were more bitterly fought than now, Frank E. Gorrell, secretary of the National Canners Association, then the leading citizen of Bel Air, Md., as chairman of a Democratic political meeting, apologized to his audience because the national committee had failed to produce a speaker of national prominence to address the meeting. Instead, a weather-beaten, carelessly dressed individual was introduced with as good grace as possible. The speaker then proceeded to electrify the crowd with one of the finest Democratic outbursts the county had ever heard. It was John Sharp Williams, then a representative from Mississippi.

Story of the Week

By J. BERNARD McDONNELL

INTERNATIONAL.

GERMANY refuses to be coaxed back into the interrupted international disarmament conference and has refused to participate in the four-power conference proposed by Great Britain if the conference is held in Geneva. Transfer of the conference to Lausanne has been suggested in the hope that place will be acceptable to Germany. France and England agreed to the conference at a meeting in London of Premier Herriot of France and Prime Minister MacDonald of England. Italy is to be the fourth at the conference and the United States is to be represented although not officially a participant.

Ambassador Claudel, of France, called at the White House and is reported to have repeated the desire of his nation for a protective agreement with this country before she reduces her arms.

Lloyd George, addressing the International Peace Society, in London, said that never in his lifetime had he before seen so many evidences of national antagonisms and so many possibilities of war.

The threat of Adolf Hitler, Nazi leader, to take control of the German government through the election of enough representatives of his party to control the Reichstag, was met with a blunt warning by Chancellor Franz von Papen that his government meant to continue in power and to run the German government as it saw fit. One of his plans, Von Papen said, is to revise the present constitution in a manner to reduce the importance of the Reichstag.

Perhaps the end of the German republic is already written on the wall of time. Many believe so. Former Crown Prince Wilhelm is taking a more public part in politics and is quoted by an opposition newspaper with having said that he was to be named regent and Prince Rupprecht was to be made king.

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, of Canada, announced new tariff preferences for imports from the United Kingdom in accordance with the empire economic conference held in Ottawa in July. The new arrangement will materially affect American trade with Canada.

An army of jobless men and women, 10,000 strong, rioted in Belfast, in northern Ireland, and one man was killed and a number of men and women were injured. Twelve fires were started and 2,000 police patrolled the riot area, and later troops were called into the disturbed city.

Disorders and fighting continues in Manchuria and China. Japan is planning to extend her conquest of Chinese Manchurian territory. Japanese, Manchukuoan and Korean troops are reported from Mukden to have surrounded 30,000 Chinese who are fighting against Japanese control of Manchuria.

The United States and the South American countries seeking to bring about peaceful settlement of the Gran Chaco boundary dispute between Paraguay and Bolivia told the League of Nations that negotiations were proceeding satisfactorily. The league wanted to take over the matter. Colombia rejected Peru's latest proposal for settlement of the Leticia incident growing out of the seizure in September of the Amazon port town of Leticia by Peruvians. Twenty-four prominent Communists were expelled from the party in Russia on discovery, it is said, of a plot to overthrow Josef Stalin and to change the Soviet economic program, particularly the system of collective farming.

NATIONAL—Business Up—Lawyers Meet.

THE decline in business has reached the bottom and the course of trade hereafter will be upward. That is the opinion expressed by more than 100 business leaders in response to a telegraphic poll conducted by Lehman Bros., private bankers, in New York.

A survey by the Department of Commerce shows that in the past eight weeks there has been an increase in employment, based on figures by 200 trade and industrial organizations in all sections of the country. Harvey C. Couch, director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, said that loans made by the corporation have supplied jobs to 16,007 persons on self-liquidating projects. The Interstate Commerce Commission has approved a $3,000,000 loan to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad by the corporation.

The American Bar Association, meeting in the National Capital, heard President Hoover tell them to admonish the people of the country against following false prophets of a millennium. F. Ortiz told them that the Machado regime in Cuba meant assassination and false imprisonment for critics of Machado.

Senator Borah took a hand in the drive of big business to bring about a new taxation system. The senator only spoke at a little meeting at a little Idaho town, but reports of his speech were published all over the country. Despite protest of some of the officials of the town of Taylorsville, Ill., national guardsmen are now in control of that city and the central Illinois coal mining region where miners have been on strike.

President Hoover received a delegation from the Bonus Expeditionary Army, but he refused to receive a resolution of censure for expulsion of the bonusers from the National Capital.

Samuel Insull, who fled to Greece from Paris to escape extradition for trial in Chicago on charges of cheating investors in manipulations of his gigantic financial empire, is at liberty in Greece.

LOCAL—Want in City—Police Row Pends

Persons are going to starve to death this winter in the National Capital, District officials and citizens were warned by a special committee on emergency relief headed by Sidney F. Taliaferro, former Commissioner. The warning was contained in the committee's report to the Board of Welfare in the course of which existing private and public relief measures were described as inadequate. Figures made public by the Children's Bureau showed that in eight classes of business and industrial establishments in Washington in July wages had been reduced $327,000, or at the rate of $4,000,000 a year, the report said. Twenty-five extra State police were stationed at the Waldorf Substation in nearby Maryland to combat the depredations of the "Black Shirts," which have been increasing in boldness. Decision on the proposal of Police Chief Glassford to oust Chief of Detectives Burke has not been made by the District Commissioners. C. C. Calhoun was held for the grand jury after a coroner's jury had inquired into the automobile collision between his car and that of Henry C. Littlefield, who was killed. Mildred Wen Lee, a Chinese wife and mother, was killed by her white lover, Lewis Hale, District traffic policeman.

President Hoover dedicated the $10,000,000 new United States Supreme Court Building at a corner stone laying attended by the judiciary and others.

Senator Kendrick's Wife Stricken by Appendicitis

Sheridan, Wyo., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Mrs. Eula B. Kendrick, wife of United States Senator John B. Kendrick, was taken to a hospital here today for an emergency operation for acute appendicitis.

She became ill last midnight.

Ray Tucker to Address Hebrews' Brotherhood

The brotherhood of the Washington Hebrew Congregation will open the fall season with a dinner at the Hamilton Hotel Wednesday night at 6:30 o'clock, it was announced yesterday.

MONKEYS VALUABLE IN QUEST FOR SERUM TO HALT PARALYSIS

INVISIBLE VIRUS IS KEY TO CONTROL OF DISEASE

Editor's note: With infantile paralysis still widespread the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research is concentrating some of its great resources and scientific talent toward protection against future outbreaks. Recent progress is described here as told by the head of the institute, Simon Flexner, M. D., in the American Medical Association Journal.

The significance of these animal experiments is described by Simon Flexner, M. D., director of the institue. The monkeys undergo forms of infantile paralysis so much like the human kind that there is hope of discovering through them how to protect both children and adults.

Especially in possibilities of immunity is this hope high. The monkeys are developing forms of immunity, and also failures, which parallel closely human experience.

This immunity is produced by two substances. One is the virus of infantile paralysis, the cause of the disease, an agent which is invisible even under the best miscroscope.

Injected Beneath Skin.

When this virus is injected beneath a monkey's skin, it may produce immunity. But sometimes, Dr. Flexner says, it develops paralysis instead of immunity.

Undoubtedly active immunity can be produced with the virus, Dr. Flexner states in the journal of the American Medical Association. But he adds the experiments thus far are too few or results too varied to be conclusive.

Serum is the other immunizing substance. This is the clear fluid extracted from blood of persons who have had paralysis. Used on monkeys along with the virus, it is proving an effective immunizing agent.

The use of the serum alone is widely practiced for human protection, and the Medical Journal in an editorial points out that its effectiveness has not been proven.

The Rockefeller Institute monkeys appear to have opened a lead for finding a better immunizing formula than the serum now available to human beings.

Nasal Experiments Fail.

But attempts to immunize the Rockefeller Institute monkeys by nasal instillation of the virus have so far failed. These experiments should be carried further, Dr. Flexner says, before it can be stated with certainty whether the monkeys are capable of being immunized through the nose, as man is supposed to be.

"No convincing evidence exists," Dr. Flexner says, "that the virus of poliemyelitis is qualitatively modified by chemical or physical agents. All the effects ascribed to these agents may be due to quantitative changes only. The viruses, apparently weakened by chemicals and heat or drying, when still effective, regain their lost potency quickly on monkey passage."

Virus Is Recovered.

Monkey passage means the inoculation of monkeys with human virus which gives them infantile paralysis. From the afflicted monkeys a virus is recovered, slightly different from the human kind, but still capable of causing the disease.

Finally, it has been observed at the Rockefeller Institute that monkeys immunized by injections of virus under the skin are not immunized by the same doses of virus applied directly into their nervous systems.

BUILDING A GOVERNMENT VILLAGE

Priests of 70,000 Buddhist Places of Worship Are in Need of Food.

Kyoto, Japan, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Japan's 70,000 Buddhist temples are suffering as bitterly from the world depression as the bright-light districts of Tokyo and Osaka.

Priests have taken to cultivating their own temple lands to raise enough grain and vegetables to support themselves. Temple treasures and rich ecclesiastical robes are finding their way to the pawnshops to produce funds to tide over the bitter times until relative prosperity returns.

In some wretchedly poor rural districts temples are closing, abandoned by their parishioners and priests, and elsewhere there is a tendency to amalgamation of small Buddhist temples of slightly differing sects.

Fifty thousand of the 70,000 Buddhist temples are in the country, dependent on the welfare of peasant parishioners for prosperity or poverty. The blight of depression has fallen more heavily on the farmers than any other class in Japan, and the little Buddhist fanes scattered over the countryside, most of them serving only a score or so of families, are poverty stricken.

The temples have two sources of income, rents or produce from temple lands and voluntary gifts. The average annual income of the small rural temple is only 20 or 30 bales of rice, each containing some five bushels and worth only 25 or 30 yen.

Thus in good years it is a prosperous temple that has an income, nearly all in rice or other farm produce, worth as much as 900 yen (about $250), and today this figure has been reduced by half. Out of this income the building must be kept in repair, candles and incense kept burning and the priests, their acolytes and families supported.

Dixie Called Latent Source Of Flowers for Perfumery

Louisiana Museum Curator Points Out Unrealized Possibilities of South and Success Already Attained in Growing Suitable Blooms.

Baton Rouge, La., Oct. 15 (A.P.). Out of the floral fields of Dixie may come the delicate perfumery for the toilettes of future maids and misses.

For Robert Glenk, curator of the Louisiana State Museum, has compiled a report showing the flowers of primary importance in the manufacture of natural perfume products of commerce could be made to yield good perfume products in the South.

Glenk's paper on the subject, published by the Louisiana Conservation department, sets forth that experiments have shown these flowers, grown chiefly by thrifty French gardeners and farmers for centuries, flourish equally well in the South.

Pointing out that rose water, used by Romans in early days of history and manufactured principally in Persia during the eighth and ninth centuries, has been the object of successful competition in France and Germany in recent years, Glenk said: "It may be reasoned that further migration of this industry is to be expected. Eventually the center of production may be the United States."

Geranium, grown experimentally at Orlando, Fla., has produced oils equal in odor value to foreign oils, the curator said. Palmarosa grass and citronella grass, from which the Turkish geranium oil and citronella oil of commerce are produced, have been successfully grown in Louisiana, he said.

Jasmin, employed by the Hindus in religious rites and used in China for scenting tea, has also been successfully grown in Louisiana, and Jasmin products have been made experimentally at Jacksonville, Fla.

Four kinds of fragrant products are commercially made from the orange tree in France, Glenk added, the flower oil, petit-grain oil from the leaves and twigs, orange flower absolute, and orange peel oil from the fruit. Orange flower water is also marketed.

The tuberose industry flourishes in Texas and North Carolina, and millions of bulbs are grown for planting purposes but no flower products are made.

"There is no doubt," concluded Glenk, "that soil and climatic requirements are favcrable for the production of practically all the perfume yielding plants of temperate or semi-tropical countries in many parts of the South.

"Already an interest has been aroused in the direction of volatile oil production and the trade may be relied upon to take an active part in any rational attemp's at developing such an industry, with the usual innovation of new methods and economies so characteristic of American ingenuity and enterprise."

"Atrocious" War Near Warns Belgian Leader

Dinant, Belgium, Oct. 15 (A.P.). Count Maeterlinck, in declining invitation to speak at the dedication of a monument to 670 civilians killed by German troops here August 21, 1914, approved the memorial and added:

"It is well, on the eve of a war which undoubtedly will prove more atrocious than the one whose horrors we have experienced, not to forget."

BIG ZUIDER ZEE DIKE GIVES HOLLAND LAND

Growing Population Problem Solved; Many of Ports Moved Inland.

(Associated Press.)

A 10 per cent increase in arable land is expected in the Netherlands as the result of the separation of Holland's "Old Man Sea"—Zuider Zee—from the North Sea by an 18-mile dike.

Most of the former salt-water gulf, beloved of fishermen and artists, will be pumped dry for the development of neat Dutch farmsteads, with the remainder becoming a fresh-water lake known by the Dutch as Ijesselmeer.

With an area of more than 550,000 acres, the Zuider Zee basin, situated in the heart of northern Holland, is almost as large as the State of Rhode Island. It has played an important part in the commerce and social life of the country.

Most of the seaports along the shores of the Zuider Zee are destined to become inland farming villages, connected with salt water only by canals, while islands may be hillocks, only slightly raised from the encircling fields of grain, vegetables and flowers.

Edam, famed for its globular cheeses, is among the ports to become rural centers. It was once the water-gate to Amsterdam when the only approach to the chief Dutch city was by way of the Zuider Zee. Now a deep canal connects Amsterdam directly with the North Sea.

While engineers are rejoicing in a victory over an ancient foe, the sea, which rolled in about 600 years ago over the sand dune ramparts, the fishing villages and quaint islands of the Zuider Zee are silent. Artists will doubtless miss the waterfront at Volendam and the arrival of the little fishing schooners each Saturday morning.

The color of the Zuider Zee ports and islands, which for the most part have outlived their usefulness, could not, in the opinion of the government, answer the acute need of Holland's growing population for more land.

The land to be reclaimed is to be divided roughly into four sections, or polders, by Ijesselmeer and the mouths of the Amstel and Ijessel Rivers. The lake itself, when drainage operations are completed, will be a long, funnel-shaped body of water running back from the new sea dike to the City of Kampden, a slender shadow of the former Zuider Zee. Most of the new area will be reclaimed from the huge stomach-shaped southwestern end of the Zuider Zee.

One polder, consisting of 50,000 acres, has been completed, and this year's crops were harvested from fields covered with water in 1930.

Western High Group to Elect.

The Western High School Home and School Association will elect officers for the coming year at its first meeting of the season Wednesday at 8:15 p. m. at the school. The meeting will be preceded by parent-teacher conferences. Charles V. Imlay, retiring president, will preside.

PRINCESS OF MOROS WARNS GOVERNMENT

Says That Ill Feeling Will Persist Until They Win Greater Voice.

Manila, P. I., Oct. 15 (A. P.).—Behind the new outbreak of hostilities between Moro outlaws and the Philippine constabulary, in which about 50 violent deaths were recorded in a few days in the past week, is the ringing challenge of a 38-year-old Moro princess.

This princess Dayang-Dayang, niece of the Sultan of Sulu, warned that ill-feeling between Christian Filipinos of the North and Mohammedan Moros of the South will persist until the Moros are given a greater hand in the government. The Filipinos have found difficulty in keeping 800,000 warlike Moros in order and fighting has broken out frequently between them.

Princess Dayang-Dayang said she believed Moros were capable of holding more responsible positions in the Philippine government, now dominated by the Christian Filipinos.

Moro Strongholds Secure.

Moro affairs are administered by appointive officials, but their local and religious customs are not interfered with. The Sultan of Sulu, Jamalul Kiram, is an appointive member of the Philippine Senate.

Outlaw Moro chiefs have led the uprisings lately from strongholds which the constabulary has found difficult to capture due to their unfamiliarity with the southern terrain. Some years ago the Moros were disarmed but found means of procuring weapons again. Centuries ago, their ancestors preyed on the northern islanders, carrying many off as slaves.

Princess Dayang-Dayang is a colorful personality in Filipino affairs. Recently when the legaslature gave married women the right to dispose of their own property without their husband's consent, she voiced her disapproval of the law in no uncertain terms.

Princess Opposes Suffrage.

She arrived in Manila during the discussion of this law and the revival of the movement to grant equal suffrage to women.

"I'm against the suffrage bill not only because it is against Mohammedan law, but also because the right place of the woman is in the home," she said.

But she herself is a person of considerable influence outside as well as in her home in Jolo. Several months ago she filed a claim with the Department of State to 16 islets off the coast of Borneo, her uncle having signed away his rights in a treaty.

The princess was married last summer to Datu Ombra, a Manila law student, who is some 16 years her junior.

FRANCE WILL ELECT 111 SENATORS TODAY; FEW CHANGES SEEN

Upper Chamber Is Not Due to Follow Left Swing of Lower House.

POINCARE'S CANDIDACY IS CENTER OF INTEREST

Paris, Oct. 15 (U.P.).—Little change in the political complexion of the upper house is anticipated when France, tomorrow, elects 111 senators.

Following upon the swing to the left at the general elections for the chamber of deputies last May, when M. Edouard Herriot's radical-socialist party secured a distinct victory, it has been predicted that the Senate likewise will go further to the left. This, however, is now considered improbable in informed quarters.

Unlike the chamber elections, the Senate is elected by vote of an electoral college in each department of France. The college is composed of departmental and municipal councilors and other similar officials. Only a third of the Senate is affected by tomorrow's vote, since 111 senators are elected every three years.

Drastic Changes Unlikely.

Although it is unlikely that there will be any drastic changes in the Senate, which is definitely left wing in political texture, some new faces probably will be seen when the body convenes November 1.

Some deputies will have moved up to the upper chamber, several members of the lower house having announced their candidacy.

If, as has been expected, M. Raymond Poincare presents himself for reelection, it will indicate that he intends resuming his political career. His active participation in parliamentary life would be certain to have an important reaction on the policies of the Herriot government, especially on the thorny question of finance and the balancing of the budget.

Socialists Plan Attack.

Neither M. Poincare nor the other elected senators will, however, be able to participate in the debate on the budget for 1932-33. This must be voted before December 31, and the senators elected Sunday will not assume office until January 1.

Whatever the outcome of tomorrow's vote may be, observers feel that a change in the composition of the Radical-Socialist government is imminent. In just which direction Premier Herriot will turn, whether to right or left, is not indicated. Interest is attached to the recent speech by M. Lamoureux, Radical-Socialist reporter-general of the budget, in which he predicted reconstruction of the government to a large and coherent Republican concentration.

The Socialists, under M. Leon Blum, are planning a bitter attack on the senatorial seats, but if they secure noteworthy gains, it will be an occasion for surprise.

French Arms View Is Hit by Dr. Ryan

By putting security first and disarmament second by her insistence on security guaranteed by treaty, France sets up the chief obstacle to international disarmament, the Rev. Dr. John A. Ryan, rector of Catholic University, declared yesterday in a radio address sponsored by the Conference on Disarmament.

"Many of us believe," said Dr. Ryan, "that if France gave the priority to disarmament and all the nations disarmed or greatly reduced their war equipment, security for all the nations would automatically follow."

The conference, called by the emergency peace committee, of which Tucker Smith is chairman, opened yesterday morning. The Rev. Russell J. Clinchy, representing Protestant churches, urged the influence of religion as a great force for disarmament and peace.

Daniel Frohman Will Speak Here

Reminiscences of the past half century of the American theater, during which the Frohman Brothers and David Belasco were the dominating figures, will be the basis of a talk by Daniel Frohman, upon the occasion of his first appearance as a speaker, Wednesday night at 8:15 in Constitution Hall.

Mr. Frohman will recall the famous actors and actresses of the past 50 years. He will bring out the romances and reality, the struggles and triumphs, the personalities and peculiarities of these popular favorites of the past.

The last survivor of the famous trio, the two Frohmans and David Belasco, he not only tells of the famous players, as they were seen in the footlights' glow, but takes his hearers behind the scenes, revealing the theater's practical side which the public seldom sees.

FIVE VIRGINIA CITIES SHOW TRADE UPTURN

(Associated Press.)

Business upturns at five Virginia cities were noted yesterday in Commerce Department reports from local chambers of commerce.

Roanoke, Norfolk, Danville, Harrisonburg and Winchester reported favorable factors in their business and industrial situations. Bristol, Va.-Tenn., said "there has been scarcely any change in the business trend" beyond "seasonal improvement in general conditions," but that the people there "feel a little more encouraged."

B. F. Moomaw, chamber of commerce secretary at Roanoke, said:

"We are pleased to say that our conditions in Roanoke City are very much improved industrially." He reported textile plants, including a large rayon yarn manufacturer, an overall plant and a knitting mill at "near capacity." An unfavorable factor, he said, was the low production basis of steel working plants and railroad shops.

Better Feeling Noted.

Still, he said, "there is a better feeling amongst our business people with special reference to merchants."

The opinion that "actual and psychological conditions are improving" was expressed by W. S. Harney, manager and secretary of the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce.

"Recent market changes, especially with regard to peanuts, cotton, tobacco and other agricultural products, the cool weather at the changing point of the seasons and a general atmosphere of betterment seem to have put people in a better frame of mind and with a greater tendency toward consistent optimism," Harney said.

Cotton Mills Improve.

The Danville chamber of commerce secretary, A. A. Booth, reported "some improvement" in the industrial situation there. Cotton mills there, he said, are working 5½ days per week instead of four as during the summer with a 20 per cent increase in the number of operatives. Other industries there reported some improvement, he said.

"As a result of these factors," Booth reported, general business in this city has shown a relative improvement which will be augmented by the opening of the tobacco market which is, however, seasonal." He also noted an improvement from the psychological standpoint.

G. E. Andrus, secretary of the Harrisonburg chamber, reported an increase in the operating force of a shoe factory which is running day and night shifts. An antique furniture reproduction plant, he said, had orders sufficient to keep 50 to 75 men at work for the next three or four months and that other industries were "at about normal capacity."

He attributed a "not very encouraging" situation in the mercantile business to the low apple prices and short low-priced agricultural crops.

Winchester Conditions.

The best business conditions at Winchester since the first of the year were reported by Andrew Bell, chamber of commerce secretary.

"I am proud to say," he wrote the department, "that with the exception of the apple crop business conditions here are better at the present than they have been during the year 1932."

Weather conditions, especially the summer drought, he said, had been detrimental to the apple crop. Woolen mills and other industries, he reported, at "almost full time."

The Virginia reports were six of 200 received by the department from over the country. Secretary Chapin said 140 indicated current business activity is somewhat better than in midsummer, 44 that business is substantially unchanged and that only eight stated that activity was still on the downgrade. The remainder were too indefinite to classify, he said.

BERKELEY DEMANDS SAUNDERS' REMOVAL

Claims Independents' Names Deliberately Certified Incorrectly.

Newport News, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Charging that Col. Peter Saunders, secretary of the Commonwealth of Virginia, has deliberately certified the names of himself and Dr. William Moseley Brown incorrectly as candidates for Congress for political purposes, Capt. Charles C. Berkeley has publicly called on Gov. Pollard to ask for Col. Saunders' resignation and, if that were not forthcoming, to discharge him from office.

According to the Berkeley statement, Col. Saunders certified his name as "C. G. Berkeley" instead of Charles C. Berkeley, and that of Dr. Brown as "W. M. Brown" instead of William Moseley Brown. In addition, he said, his name and that of Dr. Brown, who are independent candidates, though of the Democratic political faith, were placed near the bottom of the ticket.

He contends that the placing of the nine regular Democratic candidate names at the first place on the ticket and those of himself and Dr. Brown near the bottom was done "for purposes of making it especially easy for the voters to vote for the Democratic candidates and to make it confusing for them to vote for Dr. Brown and me."

In calling on the governor to remove Col. Saunders, Capt. Berkeley speaks of Gov. Pollard as "the high priest of clean politics and clean elections in Virginia." He calls on him to "live up to his protestations of belief in and advocacy of honest elections."

Winchester, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—John C. Bowman, Frederick County Socialist leader, has protested the action of Secretary of the Commonwealth Peter Saunders in omitting his name from the ballot in the congressional election next month.

He said he had filed as an independent candidate from the Seventh District.

He said that unless his name was ordered printed on the official ballot he would "do all in my power to have the November congressional election in Virginia declared null and void."

Baltimore Halts Six-Alarm Fire

Sugar Warehouse Is Damaged; 2 Firemen Injured by Flying Glass.

Baltimore, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—A fire, which seriously damaged a three-story sugar warehouse and adjoining pier on the waterfront today, was brought under control shortly after noon by a large portion of the city's firemen, brought to the scene by six alarms.

The origin of the fire, which was not determined, was discovered by a watchman on his morning round. Fire officials believed it had been smoldering during the night. No estimate of the loss was made. In the warehouse was stored 25,000 tons of sugar which was practically ruined by the smoke and water.

Dense smoke and an outflow of sticky, foamy liquid, caused by the mixture of sugar and water, hampered the firemen as they confined the blaze to the water side of the warehouse, divided by a fire wall. Two firemen were hurt by flying glass and debris, when one of the walls collapsed, during a series of explosions.

REPUBLICAN RALLY HELD IN CULPEPER

J. B. Phillips and J. L. Green Address Crowd of 300; Hoover Praised.

Culpeper, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—John Barton Phillips, United States commissioner of Alexandria, Va., and John Locke Green, Arlington County attorney, addressed a crowd of more than 300 persons in the interest of the Republican presidential ticket here today in the Municipal Auditorium.

Mr. Phillips outlined the efforts and accomplishments of President Hoover since he has been in office. He praised the President for his constructive efforts to rescue the country from the depression and declared, with vehemence, that signs in every section of the country were multiplying daily that the President's efforts were meeting with gratifying success.

Mr. Green dealt entirely with the benefits that could be gained by Virginia from a strong two-party system of government. He declared that if this were the situation today Virginia would not be confronted with the greatest muddle in the midst of a presidential and congressional election that the State has ever experienced in 148 years. The speaker was referring to the intensely partisan action of the Virginia Legislature in passing the redistricting bill, which recently was declared null and void by the unanimous action of the Virginia State Supreme Court of Appeals. He further stated that this action would bring into question the validity of the election of the eleven presidential electors from the State of Virginia.

STATE FOX HUNTERS TO MEET TOMORROW

Annual Field Trials to Be Staged Near Richmond; Varied Events Slated.

Chesterfield Courthouse, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The annual field trials of the Virginia Fox Hunters Association will start here Monday.

Dr. Foy Vann, of Norfolk, president, expects this year's trials to be the most successful in the association's history, largely because of the decision to break precedent and make the Richmond vicinity the scene of the meet. The decision was made after consideration of advantages, and entrants have been assured all of the comfortable accommodations the capital affords.

Their hounds will be cast each day in Chesterfield County. In addition, the fair grounds buildings here offer ample stabling facilities for both hounds and horses.

The week of sports starts Monday with the annual horse show. The show's first event—the Hunter Hacks—will begin early in the afternoon. Robert-Hill Carter is chairman of the horse show committee. He is being assisted by J. St. George Bryan, Wortham Spillman and Russell Palmore, secretary of the association.

The show includes eight classes and awards will be offered those scoring first, second and third in each event. The events are Hunter Hacks, Farmers' Saddle Horses, Jumpers, Handy Hunters, Handicap Jumpers, Novice Hunters, Ladies' Hunters and the "Touch Out," to be shown over four jumps at 4 feet.

Tuesday morning will bring the first cast in the Derby Stake, for 2-year-old hounds. This event will last two days, the best young dog in Virginia receiving a silver cup for the highest general average Wednesday afternoon. The All-Age Stake, supreme test of hounds, will be run off Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The bench show will begin Thursday afternoon.

A new note will be added to the festivities, the horn blowing contest in Richmond Saturday night. It will be followed by the grand ball at the Jefferson Hotel.

By DAVE HERMAN.

FIRED by an electrifying 87-yard run for a touchdown in the first few minutes of play by Swivel-Hipped Tom Whelan, a whirling dervish from New York City, Catholic University's aroused football team soared to dizzy heights yesterday at Brookland Stadium by conquering Dixie's intercollegiate champions, Chattanooga, 19 to 0, in what the gridiron dopesters considered a mild upset.

Whelan's heroic sprint came with the Cardinals' first play of the game, and hoisted a crowd of close to 8,000 into war hysteria. Two minutes ticked by after the initial kick off. Maurice Monroe, of the Moccasins, had just punted to Catholic University's 15-yard line. The ball was snapped to Whelan. He grabbed it like a hawk, slashed through the right side of the line, feinted, dodged, shook off three tacklers, galloped by another and raced down the field with two Chattanooga men hot in pursuit. Andrew Nardo, right guard, made a desperate leap at Tommy Whelan 15 yards before the last thin stripe, but it was a futile gesture.

Chattanooga Fumbles Costly.

Undaunted, the Southern champions fought back viciously, and completely outplaying C. U., stormed up the field time and again to within scoring distance, only to be beaten off by a line that held like steel, and also see their chances blasted by fumbling.

Catholic University had the ball very little in the first half, but showed power on the defensive, especially when its goal line was perilously close to being crossed. The Moccasins were in command on the home team's 220-yard line after Pat Montague fumbled a punt, but here Monroe, of the visitors, fumbled and Montague recovered. Toward the close of the first quarter the Moccasins benefited by a bad C. U. pass from center and marched to within 8 yards of a touchdown, but the Cardinals beat off the challenge as Haswell's attempt for a long pass over the goal failed.

A few minutes later C. U. stopped another threatening rally on its own 20-yard line, Haswell bombing the air with passes in a vain attempt to score. Halbach's long pass 5 minutes later found its mark in Haswell's arms—a beautiful 40-yard gain—on the C. U.'s 16-yard line. Again the Cardinals braced to stop the rally.

Jankowski Scores With Pass.

Clinging to its 6-0 lead, Catholic University emerged an inspired team with the start of the second half, and clicked again on the fourth play after Monroe punted. This time Charley McVean, quarter back, dropped back from his own 40-yard line and flipped a perfect pass to John Jankowski, who evaded two Moccasins after reaching up high, grabbed it on the 20-yard line, racing unmolested for a touchdown. McVean dropkicked the extra point.

Catholic University's scoring did not cease with this spectacular play. It remained for the second stringers to blast through the visiting defense for a third touchdown late in the fourth quarter.

Augusterfer had intercepted Haswell's long pass in midfield. Then followed a concerted drive with Gearty thundering through for appreciable gains. Six yards to go and Gearty ate up five with a line buck.

Auburn Air Attack Defeats Ga. Tech

Phipps, Substitute Half, Hero as Late Rally Nets 6-0 Victory.

Atlanta, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—A last minute passing attack instituted by a substitute half back paved the way for the touchdown, which gave Alabama Poly-Technic Institute a 6-to-0 victory over Georgia Tech here today.

Sent into the game the last few minutes of play, Firpo Phipps completed two forward passes, one to Talley to earn a first down, and a few minutes later was successful in passing to Grant. Gaining 15 yards and making it easy to plunge over the goal line.

Playing in a steady downpour of rain, both teams depended chiefly on an aerial offense.

The first half was a battle of punts between Capt. Jimmy Hitchcock, of Auburn, and Quarterback McArthur, of Tech. During the last half, and particularly the last quarter, Auburn launched a passing attack, completing three of nine, while Tech was successful in completing two of [illegible]

Wash. & Jefferson Ties Carnegie, 6-6

Pittsburgh, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The Carnegie Tech and Washington and Jefferson elevens, matched in the nineteenth football game between the two institutions, fought stubbornly to a 6-6 stalemate today.

George Kavel, cocaptain and hard-running half back of the Tartan squad, was the star of the Carnegie Team, lugging the ball 46 yards in two plays for his team's only touchdown toward the close of the first quarter and consistently gaining ground throughout the remainder of the contest.

The Presidents scored their six points in the second quarter, after a short punt by Mihm put them in a position to advance, which they did—52 yards in twelve plays.

Deacle, replacing King at full back, bucked for first down on the 2-yard line, and then plunged over for the touchdown.

Catawba Easy For Colonial Gridmen

NIG McCarver, sensational ten-second sophomore back, aided and abetted by Capt. Wayne Chambers, Fred Mulvey and Kirk Norton, ends, and a hard-charging line that for three quarters opened up wide gaps in the opposing wall, led George Washington's football team to a 27-to-0 victory over Catawba College, of Salisbury, N. C., last night at Griffith Stadium, before 6,000 spectators.

Held in check for the first fifteen minutes by the scrappy Tarheels, George Washington unleashed a mighty drive in the second quarter with the insertion of McCarver into the game. The Balinger, Tex., boy was the mainspring and driving force in three of his team's touchdowns. The fourth resulted from Norton's brilliant run after intercepting Witmer's pass on Catawba's 35-yard line in the final quarter.

McCarver Scores in First and Fourth.

McCarver scored his touchdowns in the second and fourth quarters. He gave G. W. its initial first down, and a minute later tossed a beautiful pass to Capt. Chambers to place teh ball on Catawba's 15-yard line. Nig shot off left tackle for 6 yards and hit the right side of the line for a touchdown on the second play. McCarver did not let up. A few minutes later he dashed up the field 15 yards to the 27-yard line, uncorked a flip to Chambers for 199 yards, and, with 10 to go, directed two plays for 6 yards before heaving the ball cleverly over the goal line into the waiting arms of Fred Mulvey for the second touchdown, juts a minute before the gun barked to end the half.

The Colonials demonstrated their superiority in the third quarter, with McCarver the thorn in Catawba's side. G. W. failed to score in this session, although Zuzu Stewart, veteran left guard of the Colonials, sent the crowd into an uproar by intercepting Witmer's attempted pass and traveling like a veritable warhorse 35 yards before being pulled to earth on Cabawba's 20-yard line by seven Carolina players. Here McCarver tred a succession of passes, his long toss on the last down over the goal line failing to reach Mulvey's hands.

Norton Gains 102 Yards In Two Plays.

Kirk Norton, the Bronson, Kans., substitute end, claimed the distinction of being responsible for 102 years in two plays. He kicked from behind his goal line 67 yards, the longest kick of the night and a minute later intercepted Witmer's pass to race down tre right side of the field 35 yards for a touchdown with four Catawba players close on his trail.

Eight minutes before the contest ended, Assistant Coach Walsh sent back the eight regulars who went out at the end of the half, and George Washington inaugurated a drive from its own 35-yard line that culminated in a touchdown from the 1-yard line by Nig McCarver. A 25-yard flip, McCarver to Mulvey, plus a series of off tackle slashes and end plays, turned the trick for G. W.

In the dying stages of the game, Catawba scored its third first down when Full Back Cesaree, star of the visitors, ripped off a 22-yard run that elicited salvos of cheers. The team coached by Charlie Moran, the man who tutored Centre College when "Bo" McMillen guided the Praying Colonels to a stunning upset over Harvard, scored two of its first downs in the first quarter.

Baker kicked three points for G. W.

George Washington rolled up 16 first downs, gained 204 yards from scrimmage, completed 6 out of 16 passes, made 441 yards from punts, and lost 55 yards from 7 penalties. Coach Jim Pixlee was not present. He was scouting Iowa's team in its game against Indiana.

WESLEYAN BEATS HAVERFORD.

DUKE WHIPS MARYLAND BY 34-0

The flashy Blue Devil backs were held in check well during the first half, but ran wild in the third and fourth quarters, scoring twice in each. About 12,000 saw the game.

Duke scored shortly after the game opened on a pass from Laney to Wentz, who raced across the goal line. Cox place-kicked the extra point. Score: Maryland, 0; Duke, 7. Maryland kicked off to Mason, Duke captain. On a quick kick, Rossiter punted over Wood's head to Maryland's 10-yard stripe. The Old Liners kicked right back but the Duke passing attack started and the score resulted.

Kellar, of Duke, passed 30 yards to Rogers who ran 50 more to the goal as the second quarter opened, but the play was called back and Duke penalized for offsides. Maryland got the ball on Duke's 24-yard line on Abbott's short punt, but lost 20 yards in three plays and was forced to punt.

Passing Attack Smothered.

Laney returned to the game late in the quarter. The Old Liners smothered a Duke passing attack as the quarter came to a close.

The Old Liners opened a bag of

Colgate Humbles Lafayette Eleven

Soleau, Ask, Rowe and Fritzz Star in Rout of Eastonians, 35-0.

Easton, Pa., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—A great Maroon football team from Colgate University, with a powerful running and passing attack and a stone wall line today overwhelmed Lafayette, 35 to 0.

Except for two brief threats, one, a pass which popped from the arms of Wermuth, just as he stepped across the goal line, Lafayette scarcely entered Colgate territory at any time in the game. For Colgate it was Soleau, Ask, Rowe and Fritzz, Coach Andy Kerr's hard running backs, who ran and passed and kicked their way to the biggest score Colgate ever piled up against a Lafayette eleven.

Throughout the first half, the up-State New Yorkers played Lafayette to a standstill. In the last two periods Lafayette eked out four first downs in which two long passes played an important part.

Within seven minutes after the opening kickoff, Ask swept around end for the first touchdown and Rowe added the point. The adept Colgate ball carriers continued their drive and hung up two touchdowns in the second period and added another pair in the third.

With practically a whole new team playing the final period, there was no scoring by either side.

OHIO AERIALS SINK NAVY TEAM, 14-0

Middies Bewildered by Passes Thrown by Brown.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 15.—An alert Ohio University football troupe that measured up to virtually all of the advance publicity heraldings took a fall out of the Annapolis Midshipmen here today, winning a hard-fought game in rather decisive fashion. The final count was 14 to 0.

The Bobcats, with a record of two years as Ohio State Conference champions, and having held University of Indiana to a 7-to-6 count two weeks ago as a demonstration of their 1932 power, unleashed an aerial that the Middies were almost wholly powerless to stop, and otherwise outsmarted and outgeneraled the Tars at nearly every turn. The Ohioans scored a touchdown in the second and fourth periods and made good both tries for point to make up their total score.

Navy Has Slight Edge On Defense.

Both teams waged a bitter battle in the line, and if anything the Tars held a shade advantage in general defensive play from this angle, but the accurate and varied passing emulated by Harold Brown, veteran back of the aggregation from Athens, held the Naval lads in a maze of bewilderment throughout. His passes proved the main factor in Navy's undoing, one putting the ball in position to score the first touchdown and another, splendidly executed, was directly responsible for the other.

Aside from absorbing defeat, perhaps the most discouraging point of the game from a naval viewpoint was the decided tendency of the Tars to fumble. The game was not four minutes old before the Middies began to juggle the ball about and otherwise mess up their offensive play. It seemed disheartening to the players, as well as to their followers in the stands, and from then on they could not get their attack to functioning to any sustained de-

YALE BEATEN BY BROWN IN 7-2 UPSET

By GAYLE TALBOT.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 15 (A. P.).—Led by Bob Chase in a furious third period attack that set Eli back on its heels and finally resulted in a touchdown after a 65-yard drive down the field, an alert Brown eleven defeated Yale, 7 to 2, in a hard fought game before 15,000 fans in Yale Bowl today.

The Blue, fighting to achieve its first victory of the season, came back valiantly in the closing minutes of the struggle to march twice within the Brown's 5-yard line, once to the 1-foot mark, only to see its hopes dashed against a powerful Brown line. Thus, Yale's 1932 gridiron scroll reads: Two ties, one defeat.

Brown Stages Drive In Third.

Brown, after getting much the worse of the going for two quarters, put on a spectacular victory drive in the third, with Chase the spearhead. The slippery senior, weaving and darting his way through a field of Yale tacklers, got away for successive runs of 30, 18 and 11 yards to carry the pigskin down to Yale's 1-yard line, whence the big full back Bill Gilbane piled through the center for the touchdown. Chase added the extra point with a perfect placement.

Yale's bare 2 points were achieved in the waning moments of the battle, when, after a brilliant passing game had carried the oval some 50 yards, the Blue offense was stopped finally and definitely on Brown's 1-foot line. The ball went over to Brown, and Chase, rather than risk a punt from behind his goal line, grounded the ball for a Yale safety.

Brown Holds Edge Over Yale.

Except in the matter of forward passes, Brown demonstrated an advantage over the big Blue eleven all the way. Sticking to a straight running attack for the most part, the

TENNESSEE WINS OVER ALABAMA

Poor Punt Leads to 7-to-3 Defeat of Crimson Tide.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 15 (A. P.).—Tennessee dashed Alabama's hopes of a Southern Conference championship by defeating the Crimson Tide, 7 to 3, here today on a rain-soaked field. The Volunteers came back strong in the final period to score their touchdown after Alabama had kicked a field goal in the third.

Punting on first and second down, Cain and Feathers, both triple threat men, put on a brilliant exhibition of kicking, sending the ball high into the murky air as the game started. A 15-yard penalty gave Tennessee the ball in midfield and Feathers skirted right end for 37 yards. Two line attempts failed and Hupke leaped high to snag a pass, which ended the Vol threat on the 20-yard line. They were punting again when the period ended.

Washington State Upsets California

Berkeley, Calif., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Down from the north country swept a fighting, ball-hawking Washington State Cougar squad today to defeat California 7-2 and blast the Coast Conference championship hopes of the Bears in a game that stunned some 25,000 fans.

A thrilling 45-yard run back of a punt by Ollie Arbelbide, Washington State quarter back, and an accurate place kick by George Sander, left half, brought the visitors the victory.

Just as they outplayed the Bears, it was a misplay by the Cougars that enabled California to post two points. The Cougars had the ball on their own 22-yard line and Sanders was back for a punt. A bad pass from center sent the ball over his head and it rolled out of the end zone, California getting credit for a safety.

Long Passes Send Army To Defeat

By ALAN GOULD
(Associated Press Sports Editor).

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—In a thrilling, desperately fought football battle high above the Hudson this afternoon Army's hard-charging forces had the answer for everything the Pittsburgh Panthers offered except the combination of Warren Heller, versatile half back, and Joe Skladany, elusive end.

These two stars combined to produce three touchdowns, offset the Cadets' spectacular comeback and give Pittsburgh its fourth successive victory of the season, 18 to 13.

Heller pierced the soldiers' defensive twice in the first half and then engineered the counter-thrust that put the Panthers back in the lead to stay in the last half as Army's gallant rallies twice fell short of their objective.

Heller Races 54 Yards To Score.

The crack Pitt half back romped 54 yards for the first Panther touchdown in the longest run of the game and twice passed nearly half the length of the field to the glue-fingered Skladany, once over the goal line and later, in the critical third period, for a 48-yard gain that enabled Isadore Weinstock, plunging Pitt full back, to go over with the deciding touchdown.

Pittsburgh's second straight conquest of the Army, in marked contrast to the route of the Cadets last year, was gained only after a terrific struggle. It was a heart-breaking setback for the soldiers, who outcharged their powerful rivals most of the afternoon and uncorked a passing attack that consistently harassed the Panthers.

Army not only regained the lead in the third period, 13 to 12, after spotting Pittsburgh two touchdowns, but missed scoring a third time by only a yard and, in the closing moments of the game, passed twice to within a dozen yards of the Panther goal.

G. U. Battered Into Defeat By Violets

2 Freak Goals Scored; Hilltoppers Held to 3 First Downs.

By BOB CONSIDINE
(Post Staff Correspondent).

YANKEE STADIUM, New York, N. Y., Oct. 15.—The superb, unadulterated manpower of New York University's gigantic football team swept Georgetown University off its unbeaten pedestal here this afternoon before 30,000 spectators. The Hilltoppers, grossly outweighed and outplayed at every department of the game, crumbled into a comparative team of novices as the unblushing Violets ripped and tore to a 39-to-0 victory—the most stunning administered to a Georgetown team in recent athletic history.

Beaten down at every turn, its back to the wall every minute of the game, Georgetown could do nothing but yield, yield, yield, against the human ramrods of New York. The vaunted Georgetown offense smashed to smithereens as it hurled itself desperately against the rockbound defensive play of the all-conquering Violet horde.

G. U. Outclassed By Violets.

If the first half had been a fight, they would have stopped it, so savagely successful were the thrusts of the N. Y. U. backs, so overpowering were the charges of the vast Violet linemen that Georgetown gained 11 measly yards against N. Y. U.'s 60, in which yardage was concealed a score of 26 to 0, at half time.

Georgetown threatened only once, when, on the opening kick-off of the second half Wilmer Bradley fought his way 62 drama-laden yards to New York's 25-yard line, but successive Georgetown plays ricocheted off the N. Y. U. defense like a popcorn ball hurled against the side of a battleship, and the amoebia threat stopped when Joe Saverini's pass was intercepted by Val Connoly, 200-pound N. Y. U. center, on N. Y. U.'s 11-yard line.

Other than that, Georgetown played the role of an abused spectator this sunny afternoon, yielding 19 first downs to the cascading Violet backs, and winning back but 3 itself.

G. U. Stiffens Defense.

Defensively Georgetown stiffened in valiant style in the third quarter, holding N. Y. U. almost yard for yard throughout the period. And in the fourth quarter, too, Georgetown held like leeches to the elephantine Violets, much more so than the 13 points, made in the final chapter, would lead one to believe.

One of these last two touchdowns caused consternation to sweep the entire stadium. Charlie Parcells had punted almost vertically near midfield. The ball came down on N. Y. U.'s 35-yard line, where Tom Carolan, half of Georgetown's defensive strength, caught it on the first bounce and placed it on the ground. Carolan walked away, when Harry Temple, Hefty back-field line plunger, rushed into the idle players before the referee's whistle had blown, scooped up the ball without a change of pace, sidestepped the bewildered stabs of several Georgetown men and ran all

JACK HIGH WINS LAUREL'S $5,000 MILE, EQUIPOISE THIRD

9-1 Shot Sets Track Mark In Win

Equipoise Bumped; Hygro Second to Canron in Third.

By WALTER HAIGHT.

JACK HIGH, 6-year-old son of John P. Grier, was holder of the world's record for a mile until Equipoise relieved him of that honor at Arlington Park last summer. But yesterday Jack High gained revenge. Matched with the great Whitney horse over the mile route, George D. Widener's horse not only won the Laurel handicap and $5,450 for his owner, but smashed the long-standing track record for the distance held jointly by The Porter and Big Blaze. Jack High's time was 1:37 1-5 against the old mark of 1:37 3-5.

Hidden on the rail behind the flying Gallant Sir as he fairly ate up ground, Jack High barely got his nose in front of the son of Sir Gallahad 3d. at the finish and many in the crowd of 20,000 who do not know their colors throughly were puzzled as to just which horse had won. Third, beaten a length and a half, came Epuipoise, with the hopes of the Whitney ace to pass Blue Larkspur in money-winning blasted for the time being.

Interesting Angles To Victory.

There were many interesting angles to the victory. The winning owner is George D. Widener, nehew of J. E. Widener, who won the race three times in a row with Osmond twice and Curate. The winning jockey, Robert (Tod) Leishman, rang up his third straight victory in the race, having had the mount on Conclave in 1930 and Flagstone in 1931. The last named ran yesterday but was not prominent. It was Jack High's first victory of the year and he paid a $19.10 mutuel.

There is a possibility that Equipoise would have been the winner with the track record sent even lower, had not the Whitney horse been bumped by Gallant Sir on the turn into the stretch. The big horse never seemed to recover from the accident.

Equipoise put on a great show for seven minutes while he held up the start. Three ground men tried all the tricks of the trade to get him in position. Workman, in his anxiousness to get away winging, was giving little help each time the horse neared the barrier. Starter Milton finally ordered Equipoise to the outside. When they were away, Osculator, Jack High and Gallant Sir were running in order with Equipoise last at the clubhouse turn. There was no change in the trip up the backstretch, except a steady gain by Equipoise. Coming to the turn into the stretch, Osculator began to throw up the sponge and Gallant Sir, Equipoise, Jack High and St. Brideaux swung to the straightaway in a bunch. In taking the lead, Gallant Sir knocked Equipoise sideways and began to draw away, but at the sixteenth pole it was evident that Jack High was to be reckoned with. He was fairly sliding down the rail. At the mutuel board, it looked like a dead heat. Jack High had a final push left, however. Leishman found it and the horse slid ahead of Gallant Sir at the wire.

Rush Hour Earns $5,250.

Rush Hour, appropriately named for his dad, Happy Time, and his ma, Activity, earned $5,250 for the S. W. Labrot holding by taking care of the field of eight that sought the Maryland Futurity for which only 2-year-olds foaled in Maryland were eligible. The starters were the survivors of 79 nominations.

Sonny Workman rode his first winner of the meeting on Rush Hour, which had an advantage of three lengths at the finish over Acautaw, from the H. Bruce barn, which in turn was four lengths ahead of Cantoria, hope of Frank Hayes.

The field was held at the post for more than ten minutes, with Acautaw and Mintie the principal offenders. When the break finally came, Acautaw was rearing on his hind legs but recovered quickly to take the lead from Cantoria in the struggle for the first turn. Rush Hour was third with the others well back. On the turn for the stretch Rush Hour moved up on the outside to swing to the front and the contest was over. Workman sat still except to look back over his shoulder as he passed the sixteenth pole.

Favorite Wins Opener In Romp.

The favorite walked home in the first race when Trace Call broke on top to make every post a winning one with R. Martin in the saddle. Learoyd, handled by Buddy Hanford, also stayed where it was as the field left the barrier to finish second. Third honors went to union, one of the three-horse Schwartz entry. Trace Call paid $4.70 and had a two-length advantage at the finish.

The choice players made it two in a row in the second. The winner was Totem, at odds on, and the colt left nothing to be desired. He stayed behind the fast pace set by Koenigsmark, II, a 173-to-1 shot, and when that one had had enough, Totem went along by himself to win under wraps by four lengths. The brilliant riding Hanford had the mount. Meeting Place took the place by a neck from the fast-closing Lucky Racket.

The Hanford influence extended into the third race and combined with a 130-pound impost to send Hygro, the Nevada Stock Farm's star filly to defeat. The winner was little Canron, game daughter of Gatalan, which came up on the inside to take the decision from Hygro by a head margin. A neck behind the odds-on favorite was Pilate, with Workman up. Hygro and Finite battled for the pace-setting honor up the back stretch, with Hygro finally pulling away as the field swung for the stretch. Hanford and Canron came through on the rail at the stretch turn, as Pilate moved around on the outside. There was a great stretch battle unfolded and it was only in the final strides that Canron managed to shoot ahead.

Canron proved a long shot in a four-horse field, paying a $19.10 mutuel.

New York U. Back Off on Long Gain Against Georgetown

TRACE CALL, having the most early speed, saved ground and came away smartly when shaken up during the final furlong. LEAROYD, a stout factor from the start, was unable to stay with the winner after the first five furlongs. UNION was vigorously ridden, but could not threaten the first two. ONE CHANCE, slow to get going, made up ground steadily in the final half mile. CANNONEER went evenly. RHODIUS was hard ridden until he began to tire on entering the home stretch. POSTPONEMENT had no excuses. The others were never factors.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TOTEM, $3.70, $2.70, $2.50; MEETING PLACE, $3.90, $3.00; LUCKY RACKET, $4.00.

TOTEM, racing as if clearly best, raced close to KOENIGSMARK II while under steadying restraint, went into command without effort midway of the final turn and held sway thereafter. MEETING PLACE, in tight quarters on the inside until reaching the far turn, responded willingly to urging, but was no match for the winner. LUCKY RACKET finished gamely from a slow beginning. FRESHET was unable to reach the leaders. KLIP DRIFT showed a dull effort. KOENIGSMARK II stopped badly.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200. Old Line State Handicap. For all ages. Start good from stalls. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:52. Off at 2:53½. Winner, W. W. Vaughan's br. f. (3), by Catalan—Rona. Trained by D. T. Morris. Value to winner, $840; second, $240; third, $120. Time, 0:23, 0:47 2-5, 1:11 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CANRON, $19.10, $3.60, out; HYGRO, $2.40, out; PILATE, out.

CANRON, kept in nearest attendance of the leaders, secured racing room on the inside when approaching the home stretch, continued through on the inside and, finishing determinedly, was up in the final strides. HYGRO, under slight reserve while resisting stout opposition from FINITE, shook the latter off when straightened into the home stretch and held on stoutly thereafter. PILATE, forced to race on the outside, closed gamely under punishment. FINITE had good speed for five furlongs and quit.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $5,000 added. The Maryland Futurity. For 2-year-olds foaled in Maryland. Start good from stalls. Won easily; place, same. Went to post at 3:27. Off at 3:37½. Winner, S. W. Labrot's b. c. (2), by Happy Time—Activity. Trained by W. Irvine. Value to winner, $5,250; second, $1,000; third, $500; fourth, $250. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:12 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—RUSH HOUR (Labrot entry), $3.40, $2.20, $2.10; ACAUTAW, $4.00, $2.80; CANTORIA, $2.40.

RUSH HOUR, allowed to settle in his best stride while rated forwardly, moved up to displace the leaders when ready and drew out rapidly to win well in hand. ACAUTAW reared into the air when breaking out of hand, recovered quickly to be taken into command, but had too much taken out of him disposing of CANTORIA. Latter forced a steady pace, but tired when the real test came. DAMASCENE was always outrun. SERENABIT had no excuses. MINTIE had some early speed.

FIFTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $5,000 added; allowances. The Laurel. For all ages. Start good from gates. Won driving. Place, same. Went to post at 5:08½. Off at 5:15½. Winner, G. D. Widener's ch. r. (6), by John P. Grier—Priscilla. Trained by W. F. Mulholland. Value to winner, $5,450; second, $1,000; third, $500; fourth, $150. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:47 3-5, 1:13, 1:37 1-5 (new track record).

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JACK HIGH, $19.10, $7.50, $3.40; GALLANT SIR, $4.90, $2.90; EQUIPOISE, $2.40.

JACK HIGH, following OSCULATOR closely from the start, responded stoutly when saving ground after passing the pacemaker entering the home stretch and, finishing with excellent courage, outstayed GALLANT SIR. Latter, kept within striking distance of the leaders, bumped EQUIPOISE when leading into the home stretch, gained a slight lead and fought it out with good energy. EQUIPOISE, taken to the outside, was taken around his field when reaching the back stretch, was badly bumped and knocked off stride by GALLANT SIR at the stretch turn and weakened. ST. BRIDEAUX showed a good effort. OSCULATOR stopped after seven furlongs. The others were held safe.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 4:47½. Off at 4:52. Winner, G. W. Ogle's b. g. (5), by Prince Pal—Dulce. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $700; second, $200; third, $100. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:48, 1:13 1-5, 1:39 2-5, 1:45 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PRINCE TOKALON, $11.70, $6.10, $5.30; JOLLY PILOT, $4.70, $3.80; RACCOON, $5.20.

PRINCE TOKALON, sluggish going to the first turn, was sent up on the inside midway of the back stretch, secured racing room until reaching the pacemaker, came to the outside and, moving to front, readily drew out approaching the finish. JOLLY PILOT, rated in front and saving ground, was severely shaken up, but could not stay with the winner. RACCOON, a close factor from the beginning, made repeated efforts, but weakened during the stretch run. NIGHT PATROL, slower than usual and a trailer early, was never able to reach contention. CREE was forced wide the entire trip. ALL ROWES stopped.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:22½. Off at 5:27. Winner, O. Two-dollar mutuels paid—KNEE HIGH, $5.20, $3.00, $2.30; FLAMING MAMIE, $3.30, $2.50; MING SUN, $3.20.

KNEE HIGH, allowed to rate along for first six furlongs, responded strongly when placed to a drive, swung wide into home stretch, wore leaders down and had enough left to stall off FLAMING MAMIE. Latter dropped back immediately after break, saved ground when moving into contention, closed with good speed. MING SUN raced PRINCESS ZALDA into defeat, weakened when final issue came.

OLYMPIC ACE ON TURNER'S PROGRAM

Richthoff, Champion of 1928-32, Faces Brunowicz.

AN Olympic wrestling champion, John Richthoff, of Sweden, will display his wares before Washington fans at the Auditorium Thursday night in Joe Turner's weekly show. Richthoff won the Olympic heavyweight title at the Olympic games at Amsterdam in 1928, and successfully defended his laurels in the 1932 games at Los Angeles. He will be pitted against Frank Brunowicz. Richthoff only recently turned pro, returning to this country last week for a tour of the States.

The match is billed as an added attraction on the six-bout card featuring Dick Daviscourt and Fred Grobmeier. The two will struggle to a finish. Chief White Feather and Pat McKay are booked for another finish of some sort in the semiwindup.

Dutch Green, pride of the Mohawk Club, will tangle with George Kiata, late of Western Maryland College, in a so-called grudge match.

Two additional matches will be announced later.

Technique Is Victor In Feature at Latonia

Latonia, Ky., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—West triumphed over East in the twenty-second renewal of the Breeders' Futurity when Hal Price Headley's speedy but inconsistent Technique led home a smart band of 2-year-olds which included four invaders from the Seaboard.

Technique, decisively outrun by both The Darb and Caterwaul, favored C. V. Whitney pair, in the Eastern Shore at Havre de Grace, was conceded but scant chance to turn the trick by the gala throng which came out for the running of the historic stake. The daughter of Supremus, the first of her sex to account for the $5,000 added prize in many years, was in a running mood, however, and after assuming command at the quarter held sway throughout the remainder of the futurity course trip. The Whitney silks, victorious in the same stake last year with The Bull, were forced to accept second and third money as their portions with The Darb second and Caterwaul third.

Trap Honors to Cook, Shelton and Parsons

H. H. Shelton, Dr. A. V. Parsons and Parker Cook were returned victors in various events staged by the Washington Gun Club in the weekly shoot at Benning yesterday. Shelton, club 16-yard champion, nosed out Dr. Parsons in the shoot-off for the first 50 of the 100-target match, after tying him at 48. Cook annexed the added target trophy, outscoring a field of ten. Dr. Parsons got off to a good start in the four-month trophy race, a new feature, scoring 23 and 25. Approximately $100 will be distributed among high guns in the latter event.

tricks, including flashy triple passes, but got nowhere with them during the third quarter while the Blue Devils counted twice. Cox plunged 2 yards for one touchdown after Laney had stepped 35 yards. The other came on a 24-yard pass from Rossiter to Abbott. Cox added both extra points with placement kicks.

The Blue Devils added two more touchdowns in the final quarter, Cox carrying the ball across for the first after passing 20 yards to Rogers. A few minutes later Abbott passed from Maryland's 31-yard line to James, who was downed 9 yards from the goal. Abbott got through center and then Mason plunged across. Abbott kicked the point after the first touchdown, but missed the second.

10-YEAR-OLD NAG WINS.

Cleveland, Ohio (A.P.).—Friend, a 10-year-old gelding, nearing his eleventh birthday, is just becoming aware of his mission in life. Although Friend had been campaigning nearly a decade on the tracks, he won his first race here this season at Cranwood. Despite his age and his non-winning record he had some backers at 8 to 1.

Fights Bowen

JIMMY REED.

BOXING BITS Hereabouts

PATSY DONOVAN, discharged from the New Brunswick, N. J., hospital, suggests a match between Nick Antonelli and Frankie DeAngelo. "A great fight if Frank will take the match," Patsy declares, adding, "Yes, winner take all."

Antonelli is a busy little scrapper, and never fails to give his best. During the past year he won four decisions and scored two technical knockouts before losing to Harry Lennox, of Cumberland, Md., in an eight-rounder at Twin City. Frankie, inactive for a year, returned to his ring wars a few weeks ago to hold Benny Schwartz to a draw.

Antonelli, now being handled by Johnny Bowen, has been booked to meet Billy Essinger a week from this Monday at Portner's.

Perhaps Frankie Mann would follow with a match between the winner and Frankie DeAngelo. Then shoot in Benny Schwartz the next week. Goldie Ahern, by the way, craves a return bout with DeAngelo, claiming Benny is the better fighter.

John Bowen also is training Sammy Hogan, Young Owen, and Walter Kirkwood. Johnny is particularly anxious to have Kirkwood show his wares at Portner's. He says Kirkwood was not in condition when Joe King blasted him for a decision at Twin City last month, but feels sure Walter now can hold his own against any opponent around this section.

The appearance of Ray Bowen and Jimmy Reed at Portner's tomorrow night in the feature bout promises to attract a record crowd for the season. Ray would rather fight than eat a good meal—that's how keen the adroit Washington welterweight is about meeting the boastful, bouncing Erie, Pa., puncher.

Back in August Ray lost to Tug Phillips, remembered as one of the toughest boys to invade Twin City. On the same card, Jimmy wrested a decision from Ray Collins. Both Phillips and Collins hail from the same stable. It is safe to state that had Phillips fought Reed, the outcome might have been different.

Bowen has beaten some mighty fine boxers. Before losing to Phillips, he scored technical knockouts over Pete DeAngeles and Henry Janco at Twin City, previous to which he flattened Sammy Braunstein in the first round at Portner's.

Boxing experts are figuring the Reed-Bowen scrap a close one. It is hard to say who is the favorite, although Ray is the most skillful. It should make up for the poor headliner on last week's program.

If a prize were to be given the crowd that does the most booing at fights, Portner's fans, no doubt, would be strong contenders for the honor. How those spectators do boo matches, fighters and decisions. Last Monday they gave Sammy Weiss and Joe Banovic the razzberries in no uncertain terms. Most of the booing, however, was for Weiss.

Reds Barry, Washington heavyweight, is scheduled to fight at Jim Corbett's Club, Tuesday night. Reds hasn't had a match since losing to Bob Godwin on the Walker-Schmeling card.

Cowboy Owen Phelps was in the ring at Portner's last week with a challenge to meet Vince Dundee in a return match. His manager, Jim Irwin, maintains the Cowboy is the better man, and wants to prove it.

Frankie Mann should use Sammy Sweet on more programs. The Ohio boy, who has fought main fights in Cleveland and Cincinnati, stopped his Philippine adversary in the first round last Tuesday after throwing punches with monotonous regularity.

Joey Goodman, former protege of Jimmy Dunn, of Cleveland, one time manager of the great Johnny Kilbane, will be around this section before long. Joey has fought three world's title holders. Most of his boxing of the past year has been confined to the Coast, where he established quite a name for himself. A dynamite puncher, Joey would probably find Buster Brown, his schoolboy rival from Baltimore, a good opponent at Portner's.

REED MEETS BOWEN AT PORTNER'S

Capital Boy to Face Colorful Slugger Tomorrow.

AFTER waiting nearly a year to attain a rating here as a windup fighter, Ray Bowen, last of the fighting Bowen family, will be out to stay on top of the ladder tomorrow night at Portner's Arena where he meets Jimmy Reed, cocky junior welterweight, in a ten-round battle.

Bowen is a seasoned veteran of the ring, although only 26 years of age. Last November, after a two-month layoff, Ray boxed and lost to K. O. Riley in a four rounder. He took the fight on a day's notice and put up a bad showing against the Mohawk clubber. He has dropped only two fights since that time.

Jimmy Reed, Bowen's opponent tomorrow night has a world of color. He has fought every leading lightweight in the country. Two weeks ago, however, he was stopped by Ohino Alverez, a Mexican, in Charleston, S. C. Jimmy claimed he was hit in the adam's apple.

Ruddy Davis and Tony Ross mix in the six-round semiwindup. Davis is out for his seventh straight victory. Ross pounded out a decision over Benny Toothman in a great brawl two weeks ago at Portner's.

Ladies will be charged 50 cents for all seats in the future it was announced by the Day Nursery committee.

PURDUE ELEVEN REPEATS 7 TO 6 VICTORY OVER WISCONSIN

Pardonner's Drop Kick Margin

Boilermakers Score After Long Gallop by Carter.

Badgers Use Forward, Lateral Pass Trick for 6 Points.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Oct. 15 (A.P.). The Purdue Boilermakers found the Wisconsin Badgers as pestiferous as ever this afternoon and were delighted with a 7-to-6 victory.

It was by the same score that Purdue defeated the Badgers in 1930. Today's victory served to alleviate somewhat the memory of the 21-to-14 defeat handed Purdue at Madison a year ago.

The slender margin of victory was the drop kick made by the unerring Paul Pardonner after Roy Horstman's touchdown in the second period.

Horstman had carried the ball for the scant distance of one yard to the goal line after Jimmy Carter had brought the Purdue partisans to their feet cheering as he dashed from near midfield almost across the Badger line.

Carter Barely Misses Score.

The fleet Jimmy was dropped with only inches to go and thus was knocked out of the glory of scoring the touchdown.

Wisconsin's touchdown was made a few moments later on a beautiful forward pass tossed by Harold Smith, to George Thurner, who in turn pitched the ball laterally to Milton Kummer. Kummer sprinted the few remaining yards to the Purdue goal posts untouched by the grasping hands of several Old Gold and Black players.

Joey Linfor tried to place kick but his effort was wide of the mark. His failure left the Boilermakers out in front with the point necessary for victory. Purdue made fifteen first downs to five for Wisconsin. The Boilermakers completed two out of four forward passes and thereby gained 38 yards. Wisconsin tried eleven forward passes, three of which were completed for total gains of 53 yards.

Ames, Iowa, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Kansas University's switch to Ad Lindsey as head coach paid huge dividends today when the Jayhawkers defeated Iowa State, hitherto considered one of the ranking teams of the Big Six, 26 to 0.

Kansas gained almost at will throughout the game, passed advantageously, outkicked the Cyclones and had little trouble in stopping the Iowa State back field. H. W. Hargiss, Lindsey's former boss, was removed as Kansas head coach, after his team lost to Oklahoma, 21 to 0, last Saturday.

Minnesota Beats Nebraska, 7 to 6

Minneapolis, Oct. 15 (U.P.).—In a game marked by continual fumbling and spotty kicking, Minnesota defeated Nebraska, 7 to 6, today, renewing a traditional rivalry that had lapsed 12 years.

Nebraska swept the Gophers off their feet at the outset. Sauer, Cornhusker full back, stood on his own 20-yard line and sent a 75-yard kick to the Gophers' 5-yard line.

Minnesota punted back but Sauer threw a pass from midfield to Masterson on Minnesota's 5-yard line. Masterson took the ball over his shoulder on the dead run and was brought down on the next step.

Another running pass, Sauer to Masterson, in the end zone was good for a touchdown. Masterson's place kick was wide.

Minnesota scored on a weapon introduced last year by Coach Fritz Crisler, a forward lateral pass. All during the second period the Gophers had monopolized the play in Nebraska territory. Finally a poor kick by Sauer gave the Gophers a break.

Lund threw Robinson a short forward pass and the latter snapped it sharply to Manders. Manders fumbled but recovered and ran across the goal line. The ball was ruled not dead and the score allowed. Manders then place-kicked the extra point.

Methodists Rally To Beat Syracuse

Score 10 Points in Final Period to Cop the Verdict, 16 to 6.

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 15 (U.P.).—Southern Methodist University scored 10 points in the final period today to break a 6-all deadlock and defeat Syracuse, 16 to 6, before 15,000 spectators.

Bert Baxter, with perfect interference, raced 48 yards for a touchdown. He made good the kick after touchdown, and also accounted for a field goal later.

Syracuse started the scoring in the opening period when Wamsack intercepted a forward pass, and raced 35 yards. The kick was bad. However, the Southern team came back to temporarily tie the count in the same period. On their own 13-yard line, S. M. U. registered five consecutive first downs, and then plunged over Syracuse's goal line. The kick was bad, and the score remained tied until the final period.

Southern Methodist was stronger on the offense, making fourteen first downs, against ten for their opponents. Syracuse played better in aerial passing, completing four forward passes and two laterals, against two forwards and two laterals for S. M. U.

HONOR "OLD-TIMER."

The week-end of October 21-22 this season will be the "official" reunion at the University of Iowa for members of its 1907 football squad. Each season a different "old-timer" squad is thus honored.

MICHIGAN 14-0 VICTOR ON PASSES

Ohio State Defeated as 42,000 Watch Newman Star.

By JAMES L. RENICK.

OHIO STADIUM, Columbus, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Headed by an intrepid leader, Harry Newman, a great maize and blue football team from Michigan today beat a gallant Ohio State eleven before a crowd of some 42,000 persons.

Turning back everything the home team offered, the Blue horde struck two times with deadly precision at the Ohio goal in the first half to record a 14 to 0 victory.

Michigan then was content to go on the defensive. Guarding carefully its 14 point lead, it withstood five Ohio scoring threats, each time bracing with the ball within its 25-yard line.

Newman's Passing Important.

It was Newman and his accurate aerial heaves that spelled defeat for the Buckeyes. From scrimmage Ohio State gained 144 yards to Michigan's 46. But two accurately thrown forward passes, one when the game was only five minutes old, and the other in the second period, gave Michigan its winning margin. Newman, after each touchdown, booted perfect kicks from placement.

Play during the entire second half was in Michigan territory. Twice the ball was within the 10-yard line.

Michigan's first touchdown came quickly following Cramer's punt that traveled a mere 12 yards out of bounds, Michigan taking up its offensive from Ohio's 30-yard line. A Newman pass to Everhardus took the ball to the 15-yard line and after two futile line plays Newman tossed to Regeczi for a marker.

The second Wolverine touchdown came likewise after Michigan's bucking and running game had bogged down when Newman unexpectedly let loose a pass to Capt. Williamson, who was standing unguarded near the goal line.

ILLINOIS 26-0 VICTIM OF WILDCATS

Rentner Prominent in Victory; Subs Score in Last Period.

MEMORIAL STADIUM, Champaign, Ill., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Northwestern's Wildcats regained a big chunk of territory in their comeback campaign today by ripping out a 26-to-0 triumph over Illinois.

There had been rumors that Coach Bob Zupke was prepared to hand Northwestern an unpleasant surprise, and during the first period and part of the second, it looked as though the Wildcats were willing to help them. They were sluggish on the offense and only brisk defensive work kept the Illini from becoming dangerous.

After Northwestern had muffed a chance to score in the first period, Pete Yanuskus, Illinois half back, snatched one of Pug Rentner's passes and raced 52 yards before he was hauled down by the last man in his path. The Illini could not gain, however, and threatened no more until the fourth session.

Rentner Shows Ability.

Northwestern, inspired by Rentner's dashing play, came to life in the second period and after the Pugger had returned a punt 43 yards to Illinois' 31-yard line drove right through to the first touchdown. Smashes at the Illinois line took the ball to the 10-yard line, where the Illini staged a gallant stand, holding Northwestern to a yard in three downs. Ollie Olson fired a pass to Ed Manske, who caught the ball while lying on his stomach. Olson's drop kick added the seventh point.

Rentner showed the crowd of 25,000 that he was the soul of the Northwestern attack, got away for 16 yards to start the second drive which came early in the third period. Olson finally piled through guard to score, but missed the extra point. Only a few moments later Rentner sailed around right end for the score and Bill Riley place-kicked the point.

Coach Dick Hawley sent in a back field of substitutes in the final period and the youngsters staged another scoring march with Jakie Sullivan finishing up with a 6-yard twist through tackle.

FURMAN ELEVEN WINS.

Furman scored a touchdown in each of the first three periods and threatened a half dozen other times. Davis Elkins made no real threats.

IOWA VICTIM OF INDIANA DRIVE, 12-0

Hoosier Eleven Runs Gauntlet of Scoring Before 10,000.

By T. E. APPLEGATE.

MEMORIAL STADIUM, Bloomington, Ind., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Indiana University football team displayed a varied attack to defeat Iowa here today, 12 to 0, and gain its first Western Conference victory of the season.

A sparkling, smashing 24-yard dash off the Iowa left tackle by Don Veller, slippery little half back from Linton, Ind., clinched the Indiana victory on the third play of the second half.

Veller, a twisting runner with plenty of speed, cut back once he passed the scrimmage line and, running almost without interference, slid out of the hands of three Hawkeye tacklers to cross the goal line standing up.

Variety of Scoring By Hoosiers.

The Hoosiers had variety in their scoring. In addition to the touchdown, they counted a place kick for a point after touchdown by Lyons, giant Negro end. A 25-yard field goal, also by Lyons, and a safety scored when Schmidt, substitute Iowa half back, stepped out of the end zone while punting from behind his goal line.

It was the Hoosiers' first victory over the Hawkeyes in the history of their football relations. The Iowa players, smarting from stunning defeat in their Big Ten opener at Wisconsin a week ago, stepped out at the start of the game to outplay Indiana throughout the first period.

The Hoosiers appeared lethargic under the hot sun which beat down on the homecoming crowd of 10,000, but came to life in the second quarter.

Hopkins Beats Lehigh On Kelly's Long Run

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 15 (U.P.).—A 70-yard run for a touchdown by Don Kelly enabled Johns Hopkins to beat Lehigh, 12-6, today. About 3,500 fans saw the Blue Jays rally to win after being outplayed in the first three periods.

Neither side was able to score in the third period, but early in the final quarter Hopkins tallied the winning touchdown.

Lehigh scored its touchdown early in the first quarter on a pass, Halstead to short. Hopkins tied the score late in the second quarter on a pass, Beeler to Kelly.

Fordham Smothers Lebanon Valley, 52-0

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Fordham's entire three elevens crushed a defenseless Lebanon Valley by a 52-to-0 count here today.

Scoring in every period the Rams employed an offensive that kept the Pennsylvanians baffled from the very outset. Andy Pavlicovic, a second-string back, tallied twice through a light Lebanon Valley forward wall.

Charley Rust and Grant Fesser played well for the losers and figured in the only three first downs registered by the embattled visitors.

CANISIUS DEFEATED.

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The University of Baltimore Football Team edged out a 7-to-6 victory over Canisius College here today.

Geogan went over for Canisius in the second period and his kick after touchdown went wide. Baltimore scored in the last period, Mills going over from the 3-yard line after taking a pass from Bender. Mezzula kicked the winning point.

AMERICAN U. GRIDDERS SCORE

Bridgewater Routed for First Eagle Win in 2 Years.

DEFYING recent American University football history, the Eagles' football team ran roughshod over a weak Bridgewater College eleven yesterday, winning by a score of 33-0. It was American's first victory in two years.

Eddie Parke, giant full back, and "Swampy" Clark, elusive half back, shone for the locals. Parke scored three of his team's five touchdowns and smashed through the opposing team for innumerable gains. Clark, although he carried the ball frequently, played particularly well on the defense, breaking through to smear Bridgewater runners at frequent intervals.

Bower's Long Runs Feature.

Chet Bowers' long runs paved the way for the Eagles' first score. He carried the oval to the five-yard mark on three trips, and Parke went the remaining distance to the goal line. From then on it was only a question of how large the final score would be.

The Virginians were stronger in the second half, but the locals threatened on four distinct occasions.

Two sensational forward passes, thrown by Parke, featured the attack. Al Buffington and Clarke were on the receiving end.

Derr and Crews, both back field men, were outstanding for the visitors.

Emerson Trounced By Wenonah, 25-0

A big well-drilled Wenonah Military Academy eleven trampled Emerson's gridders in a game played on the Monument Grounds yesterday, winning by a score of 25 to 0 before a large crowd.

Led by Bill Poley, the Cadets shoved over two touchdowns in the first two periods to assume a commanding lead. A spurt in the final quarter added two additional six-pointers to the Pennsylvanians' score.

Texas U. Is Extended To Defeat Oklahoma

Fair Park Stadium, Dallas, Tex., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The University of Texas Longhorns, victors last week 65 to 0 over Missouri, were forced to the extreme of their power today to eke out a 17 to 10 victory over the lighter but faster Oklahoma University eleven.

Bohn Hilliard, Longhorn half back, made both of Texas' touchdowns, once returning a punt on a 95-yard run from his own 5-yard line to score. Blanton, Texas tackle, kicked to add the extra points and made a field goal from the 10-yard stripe late in the final quarter.

Bob Dunlap, Oklahoma quarter back, scored all of the Sooners' points, kicking a field goal early in the game to give his team a 3-0 lead and later converting a touchdown from a series of passes. He kicked for the extra point.

WHALEN LEADS C. U. TO VICTORY BY 19-0

Whelan's 70-Yard Run Called Illegal.

Tom Whelan provided another thrill a few minutes before the third quarter ended, but his great efforts went for naught. Haswell, of the visitors, who had been throwing passes to his two ends and Halbach in a desperate attempt to score, saw one of his flings intercepted by Whelan on C. U.'s 30-yard line. Whelan, officials later pointed out, was two steps out of bounds. But few in the stands knew this was true. Instead, they cheered the hero as he sprinted 70 yards through the entire Moccasin forces for a brilliant exhibition of broken field running.

Chattanooga, lacking the scoring punch in the face of a determined stand by Catholic University, left the field nursing its third football setback in the three years they have reigned as S. I. A. A. champions. But they showed a flashy team, with Monroe, Haswell and Halbach as potential threats. One of the greatest centers ever to perform here, Alexander Urban, bull-necked 175-pounder of the Moccasins, stole the line show with his alertness, clever charging and tackling.

By EDWARD J. NEIL.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Two savage thrusts, knifing through the Dartmouth defense like a shearer biting through tin, carried Pennsylvania's powerful, unbeaten eleven to victory today over a mighty but woefully unlucky big green squad from the Hanover Hills of New England.

Before a crowd of 55,000, massed in sunny comfort in the big horseshoe stands of Franklin Field, Ed Masavage, Quaker quarter back, raced 51 yards in the first quarter, and his substitute, Lionel Collis, plucked a Dartmouth pass from the air on a dead run to dash 35 more in the second period for the two touchdowns that whipped the Green, 14 to 7, in a renewal of an old rivalry that dates all the way back to 1896.

Piling up 12 first downs to 6 for Pennsylvania, the Big Green, led by rampaging little Sammy Fishman, battled the fates to crash through finally to a lone touchdown in the final period, but only one of the strangest of football happenings, a mistake frankly admitted by the referee, Bill Crowell, prevented Penn's margin from being even higher.

After Fishman raced a kick back 26 yards early in the final period to Penn's 37-yard line, took a lofty pass from Bill Clark to the Quaker 5-yard line, and then on fourth down, got off an all but impossible touchdown pass to Bill Embry, a sub end, a perplexing blocked kick situation that cost Pennsylvania at least 6 more points.

Off on another splurge deep in their own territory, the Dartmouth warriors finally bogged down on their own 43-yard line and Bill Clark dropped back to kick. Howie Colehower, giant Penn tackle who played magnificently all day, smashed through and blocked the punt as Roy Engle, Quaker center, picked up the ball and raced for the Green goal line, Crowell's whistle tooted.

There was a terrific uproar down on the field as Engle was called back and the ball given to Penn on Dartmouth's 26-yard line. Crowell explained it this way in the dressing room.

"Engle had a perfect right to run the ball over for a touchdown, but as he stopped for a second to let his interference take out the last Dartmouth man, I inadvertently blew my whistle. I explained to both teams that I had made a mistake. But under the rules the ball was dead on the 26-yard line, where I blew the whistle. That unfortunate decision had to stand."

W. VA. STATE BEATEN BY HOWARD

Bisons Score on Long Aerial Near End, Hall to Sewell.

THE Bisons of Howard University yesterday in a clean, hard game defeated the Yellow Jackets from West Virginia State College (Charleston), 6 to 0, in the final quarter with a passing attack in which Hall, Ware and Sewell scintillated, and dazzled the fighting visitors, who had held Howard scoreless for three periods.

"Joe" Sewell, former Dunbar star, came into the game from the reserves on the bench, replacing Perry Howard, and made himself the Bison hero by being on the receiving end of Hall's pass that won the game.

The Bisons, starting their offensive in the final period, advanced the ball to West Virginia's 2-yard line, by a series of clean forward and lateral passes, where it was lost on downs, kicked out, and returned by the aerial route, close enough to enable Sewell, on the final pass, to pick up "Sallie" Hall's 27-yard throw for a 20-yard run to touchdown.

West Virginians Hold Edge In Scrimmage Gains.

The West Virginians gained 138 yards in scrimmage to Howard's 69, and lost 22 yards to Howard's 48. They kept the ball in Bison territory for three quarters, and were a constant threat because of Moore's sensational broken-field running. Bolden, another Bison reserve, who went in for Chandler at left end, stopped Moore time after time, and must be accredited, along with Sewell, with the honors afield.

The Bisons, who defeated St. Paul last week, will meet Virginia Union, of Richmond, next Saturday, at the stadium—to be followed by Virginia State and Hampton, before the Lincoln game is played here on Turkey Day.

ARMY LOSES LEAD AND GAME TO PITT

The strong Pitt defense and the final whistle combined to put an end to this thrilling bid of the Cadets to overhaul their rivals.

West Point Registers 17 First Downs.

West Point, though unable to check Heller and Skladany, piled up 17 first downs against 11 for Pittsburgh. The Cadets were outrushed 215 yards to 152, but completed 9 passes for the extraordinary gain of 226 yards as compared with Pitt's advance of an even 100 yards via 3 aerials.

A crowd of 20,000 spectators alternately was thrilled by Pittsburgh's touchdown thrusts, the resourcefulness of the Panther defense and Army's spectacular play in which the defensive work of Dick King, of Georgetown, S. C., was outstanding. King's deadly tackling, as well as that of Capt. Milton Summerfelt, of Benton Harbor, Mich., stopped many of Pittsburgh's power drives.

Charlie Trigg, now head coach, is a former S. M. U. end. Last year he was assistant to Nick Dobbs, who drilled Highland Park in the Notre Dame system. Now Trigg has announced his intention of taking leaves from the books of both Knute Rockne and Ray Morrison.

PENN STATE BEATEN BY HARVARD

By BILL KING.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—All but one of the gears in Harvard's powerful football machine meshed perfectly today as it wore down the hard-fighting Nittany Lions from Penn State for a wide open 46-13 victory.

The game was much closer than that top-heavy score indicated, for the Lions consistently threatened with their brilliant overhead attack. Many times during the early stages, the Crimson was caught flat-footed while Capt. George Collins and Bill Lohr, the Lions' crack passing duo, were in action and this pair capitalized Harvard's only weakness for a total overhead gain of 107 yards, a large share of which paved the way for Penn State's two touchdowns.

Harvard Ragged At Start.

The Crimson opened in ragged fashion, Quarter Back Harry Wells fumbling the first enemy punt on his 28-yard line, a break which enabled the Lions to attempt an unsuccessful 15-yard placement kick after their running game was halted on Harvard's 4-yard line.

The goal line stand tightened the Crimson's loose bolts and the machine was purring smoothly when the next break happened. An exchange of punts gave the Lions the ball on Harvard's 40, and after Collins made 5 on two end runs Tom Harper fumbled on an inside slam at right tackle. The ball soared into the arms of Irad Hardy and that 222-pound tackle plouged 65 yards to register the opening touchdown. He was almost hauled down several times, but his interferers always acted in the nick of time.

The Lions countered with a thrilling aerial attack. They took the kick off on their 20 and in three plays, two of which were passes from Lohr to Collins, were on Harvard's 28. Lohr then faked a reverse and twisted inside his right tackle for a touchdown and Collins tied the score with a place kick. From then on it was all Harvard.

New York, Oct. 16 (A.P.).—A powerful St. Thomas eleven from Scranton, Pa., checked Chick Meehan's team, 7 to 0, before a crowd of 15,000 in Ebbets Field today.

Crashing through for a touchdown in the early minutes of the first period, the Scranton eleven held its margin grimly, five times repulsing Manhattan drives inside their own 20-yard line.

Pete Tabone, a hard-running back, scored the only touchdown of the game, and also kicked the extra point. Interception of a Manhattan pass by Jack Gatto on the locals' 10-yard line put the ball in position for the score, Tabone finally going over from the 2-yard marker.

Twice in the second period and once in each of the other three, the St. Thomas line surged through to thwart potential Jasper scores. Manhattan amassed 11 first downs to St. Thomas' 9.

TIGERS HOLD CORNELL TO 0-0 TIE

By FOSTER HAILEY.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Pushed and mauled around by all its major opponents for many weary months, Princeton made a long step forward today as it rallied under a threatening Cornell attack to outplay and outfight the Big Red team through the second half of their twenty-second gridiron contest and gain a scoreless tie.

The contest was as near victory as a Princeton team has come against "big league" opposition since 1930 and gave hope to Tiger rooters that happier days may be just around the corner. It was the first tie game between the two schools in their long football rivalry dating back to 1891, a rivalry which stands 15-6 in favor of the Tigers, but which has been all Cornell in recent years.

Neither team showed a consistent attack and most of the game was a punting contest between Purnell, Draudt and Craig for Princeton, and little Walter Switzer for Cornell, with the Tiger booters having the best of it most of the time.

Each team got inside the other's 20-yard line once, but the play for the most part was between the two 30-yard markers. Cornell gained seven first downs, six of them in the second quarter, and Princeton six, but except for that second quarter rush, when the Big Red team looked definitely superior, the game was evenly fought and the 20,000 rooters of the two schools found few exciting moments in which to cheer.

Princeton gave its rooters something to cheer about before the game was many minutes old as Purnell passed to Kadlic for a gain of 26 yards to put the ball on Cornell's 32-yard line, but the Cornell line threw back the Princeton attack there.

Geoffrion, a little Cornell back, gave Cornell rooters hope for victory as he intercepted a pass near the end of the game and for a moment appeared to be loose for a touchdown, but he was run down on Princeton's 45-yard line and although he took a pass a moment later to race to the Tiger's 28-yard line, the game ended before another play could be run.

Newt Godfree of Alabama recovered. Two line charges failed but Tennessee was offside and drew a 5-yard penalty.

The Vols nullified two lateral passes and cut Holly down on an end run, the ball going over. Feathers punted to Alabama's 45-yard line.

Alabama took the ball on Tennessee's 47-yard line and on three plays Leslie and Cain drove to the 30-yard line. Chappell and Holley battered the line without gain and Holley place-kicked a goal from the 15-yard line. Cain punted 63 yards to Tennessee's 3-yard line as the half ended.

The efforts of the Alabama backs to get steam failed when they slipped and skidded on the slippery grass, forcing Cain and Feathers to return to their kicking game, as the third period ended. Alabama was short by a foot of the first down on Tennessee's 27-yard line and Cain punted to the Tennesseans' 2-yard line. In a daring attempt to score, Feathers shot a 16-yard pass to Brackett from behind his goal line, but the play was called back and Tennessee penalized because the passer was not 5 yards behind the line of scrimmage. He then punted to midfield.

Three Tennessee substitutes went into the game to start the fourth period and after a flash of power which died without first down, Feathers sent up a high spiral which rolled dead on Alabama's 1-yard line. Cain took a bounding pass from center and got off a short kick to his 11-yard line. Feathers rammed the line for 3 yards, Wynn added 2 and Feathers darted around right end for a touchdown. Wynn added the point from placement and the Vols were ahead, 7 to 3.

Tennessee came within an ace of scoring with the ball on Alabama's 17. Three line plays and a pass carried the ball to the 8-yard line but Alabama presented a stone wall and took the ball on downs. Cain was thrown behind the goal on an attempted pass, but the play was voided and Tennessee penalized for offside. Cain punted to the 35-yard line as the game ended.

Seamon Makes Lone Touchdown With Forward Pass.

V. P. I. Turns Back Scoring Efforts to Maintain Record.

By HEYWOOD BELL.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—A powerful and deceptive Virginia Polytechnic Institute eleven today took to the air for its well earned 7-to-0 victory over the stubborn William and Mary Indians.

Their smashing line drives all but smeared throughout the first half, the Techmen late in the third period resorted to a long pass from Mills to the unguarded Seamon, who ran 25 yards to the goal. Mills made the placement kick count for the extra point.

Playing before a crowd estimated at 17,000 persons, including the entire V. P. I. cadet corps, and the whole William and Mary student body, the teams battled on even terms during the first half.

Both Teams Try Aerials.

Spasmodically gaining with their power drives did not satisfy either, and both frequently resorted to the air, and to punting, with the Indians taking the kicking honors.

The second half opened with the battle still in midfield.

It was at this point that Tech started the drive that resulted in the only score of the game. Holsclaw came out of a piled up line for a 6-yard gain. Holsclaw made it first down on a fake that fooled the Indians repeatedly. Smith was stopped in his tracks but Mills added three more through the line.

The long pass, thrice attempted, but failing each previous time, again was hurled, this time into the waiting arms of Seamon. It was thrown 20 yards, and the fast left end outstripped the one man who had a chance to down him.

Statisticians showed the V. P. I. eleven was superior in most departments of the game, although from the spectators' point of view the teams were evenly pitted until William and Mary's offensive showed signs of weakening before the Tech power, late in the game.

Throughout two and a half periods they presented two strong offenses battling against two strong defenses.

The backs of both teams broke away around the ends and rammed the lines. Until the score, both apparently had no weak spots, the forwards withstanding the smashing power drives developed by both teams.

Woodberry Trounces Augusta Cadets, 19-0

Special to The Washington Post.

Woodberry Forest, Va., Oct. 15.—Slashing off tackle and speeding around the ends for a total of 11 first downs and three touchdowns, Woodberry Forest defeated Augusta Military Academy on Hanes Field here this afternoon, 19 to 0. The Cadets were able to gain only one first down and were never in scoring position.

Moore contributed the first touchdown on a run around right end in the second quarter. In the same period Monsted skirted the left flank for the second marker. Both tries for points were low. In the fourth quarter Moore drove off tackle and reversed his field to score the final touchdown. Mason kicked goal for the extra point.

Although spectacular in spots, the game was marred by frequent fumbles and penalties. The play of Harman, Scott and Monsted was outstanding for Woodberry, while Harshbarger, a scrappy guard, stood out for the Cadets.

Holy Cross Victor Over Detroit, 9-7

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 15 (U.P.).—A 25-yard fourth-period drop kick by Clifford, substitute quarter back, gave Hily Cross the margin of victory as it defeated Detroit, 9 to 7, today.

Hloy Cross scored in the first period after a Detroit back fumbled a bad pass from center, and Harvey recovered the ball fro Holy Cross on the Detroit 2-yard line. Don Kelly, Holy Cross full back, plunged across for a touchdown on the first play.

Detroit scored midway in the fourth quarter, after Holy Cross had completed its scoring. McCracken, light Detroit back, shot a 15-yard pass to P. Rajkivoch, a back, who ran 45 yards for a touchdown. McCracken added the extra point by a drop kick.

Don Barrett, Detroit lineman, suffered an attack of appendicitis during the game, and was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital. Examination showed an immediate operation was necessary, and Barrett started immediately for Detroit.

LEXINGTON, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—A stubborn V. M. I. team could not resist the brilliant attack of Wingfield and Mackorelle, who performed sensationally today in Davidson's 12-to-0 victory over the Cadets.

Time and again the Davidson back field phantoms glided through the broken field to return punts from 20 to 50 yards through the Cadet defensive, and from behind their own line of scrimmage clipped off sizable gains around the ends and off tackle.

V. M. I.'s Line Weakens Twice.

V. M. I.'s much improved line which on six occasions held the visitors for downs within the 15-yard line, grudgingly yielded a touchdown in the first quarter and another in the final period. On both occasions the try for extra point failed.

Teaming with the brilliant back field duo, were a pair of sterling ends, Morgan and Morris, whose play was outstanding in the visitors' forward wall. On three occasions Morgan leaped high into the air to spear passes for good yardage and on the defensive end held back attempted thrusts around his sector.

Meanwhile, the flying Cadets, attempting desperately to score, suffered from misdirected passes that were scooped up by Davidson interceptors.

The Cadets were able to complete only three of sixteen passes tried, and saw three of them intercepted. One of these was partially blocked by Hand, Davidson tackle, who intercepted it on the Cadet 2-yard line and stumbled across for a touchdown in the last as the Flying Squadron tried frantically to score by the aerial route.

Wingfield scored the first Davidson touchdown in the first quarter after the Wildcats had made a sustained march down the field.

Smith's Aerial Feature Of Game.

Both teams used passes with less than fair success, but one completed by V. M. I. proved the feature of the afternoon. It was a 52-yard heave by Billy Smith, who standing on his own 7-yard line tossed to Jack Walker on Davidson's 41-yard line. The Cadet end was hurt as he was tackled by Mackroelle.

Straub and Capt. Kostainsek, who started the season as a pivot man, but later was converted to a full back, carried the brunt of the V. M. I. attack, that at times looked impressive, although it was able to register only six first downs as compared with nine for the visitors.

Hilliard, a veritable tower of strength in the Cadet line, on several occasions broke through the Wildcats' forward wall to throw ball toters for losses. But when the line proved impregnable, the visitors took advantage of their superior open play to carry the day.

Edgar Scores for Virginia As Columbia Wins, 22 to 6

NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Columbia's powerful eleven remained among the undefeated by crushing a stubborn and aggressive University of Virginia Football Team, 22 to 6, in their intersectional tussle at Baker Field today. Twelve thousand fans watched the contest.

Carelessness streaked the attack of the Lions, but they managed to score a touchdown in each of the first three quarters, in addition to a safety.

Virginia's cause was partially saved by Bill Edgar, quarter back, who grabbed a 15-yard pass from Tommy Johnson and sprinted 30 yards for a touchdown early in the fourth period, with a complete Columbia second team in the fray.

Two Blocked Punts Hurt Virginia.

Clifford Montgomery, Lion quarter back and pilot, scored the first two Columbia touchdowns. Joe Ferrara, sophomore tackle, blocked a Virginia punt and downed it over the goal for the third touchdown in the third period. Capt. Steve Grenda, Ferrara's mate at guard, blocked another punt in this period for a safety.

The first touchdown came on the fourth play of the game, Montgomery sweeping left end for 15 yards after he had passed to Brominski for a 44-yard gain. The second came after Montgomery's quick kick had pushed Virginia back to its 12-yard line. Sippley started to kick while on the 4-yard mark, but Ferrara blocked and fell on the ball over the goal.

The safety preceded the touchdown in the third quarter. Virginia had held on downs and took the ball on its 20-yard mark. A 15-yard crawling penalty made Johnson, sub for Sippley, attempt a kick from behind the goal. Grenda stormed in, blocked it and the ball bounded in the end stands.

61-Yard March Staged By Columbia.

A few moments later Columbia marched 61 yards after Montgomery had intercepted a pass. The Lions made three straight first downs and Montgomery took it over.

Columbia made 17 first downs to 3 for Virginia, but lost 75 yards on penalties and fumbled on six different occasions.

D. C. SCHOOL ELEVENS IN 6 GAMES

Tech-Eastern Clash Tuesday eFatures Week's Card.

SIX games, featured by the Tech-Eastern battle in the high school championship series, make up the scholastic grid card this week. Two of the games will take local schools to foreign gridirons, Emerson journeying to Woodstock, Va., for a tussle with Massanutton Military Academy, while Devitt Prep is slated to meet Harrisburg Academy in the Pennsylvania city. Both of these games will be played Saturday.

The withdrawal of Roosevelt from the game for the season leaves a void in the championship schedule Friday. The Teddybears were originally scheduled to play Central on this date.

Gonzaga and St. John's have no games scheduled this week, although Orrel Mitchell was attempting to book a game for the Purple, and Jack Dunn was also on the lookout for an opponent for the Cadets.

Western Host Tuesday to Alexandrians.

Western will entertain Alexandria High School in its new stadium Tuesday, and Dan Ahern's charges should trim the Virginians without undue exertion. Ahern plans to use his second stringers in the game as much as possible, saving his few regulars for the more important school series frays.

An old rivarly will be renewed on St. Alban's field Friday when Georgetown Prep tackles the home team. Both schools boast small, but scrappy teams and their meeting is always marked by good football and numercus thrills. Landon also will see action Friday, journeying over the Alexandria for a tilt with Episcopal's "B" squad.

Wilson Stadium should bulge with fans Tuesday for it will be Tech's first appearance in a local game, and the populace is eager to see just what Hardell has this year. Eastern is regarded as the dark horse of the series, and with its light, but speedy back field the Lincoln Parkers may surprise the champions.

Hungarian Swimmer Plans 225-Mile Jaunt

Budapest (A.P.).—August Radka, young Hungarian swimmer, succeeded in convincing the ministry of education that he could swim down the Danube from Vienna to Budapest, covering a distance of 225 miles.

The officials, skeptical at first, were convinced by Radka after his first trial performances and have advanced him the necessary cash to make his preparation and to pay for his trip to Vienna.

TIGERS IN 0-0 TIE WITH JACKETS

Record Crowd Sees Rivals Battle to Deadlock.

FARMVILLE, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Hampden-Sydney's home-coming game with Randolph-Macon ended in a scoreless tie here this afternoon as a record crowd of Tiger alumni witnessed the struggle. Both teams earned eight first downs.

The yardage gained by the Tigers through scrimmage surpassed that of the Randolph-Macon eleven, by virtue of long end runs and completed passes. Beall's punting for the Jackets outdistanced that of Humphreys, the Tigers' punter. On the kick-off, Young, of Hampden-Sydney, received the ball and returned it for 5 yards. Cunningham exchanged punts with Humphries, bringing the ball to Randolph-Macon's 30-yard line.

Runs by Hardaway and Daughtrey netted the Tigers approximately 35 yards and two first downs.

Smith Outstanding for Randolph-Macon.

By continuous drives the Tiger eleven kept the ball in Randolph-Macon territory throughout the latter part of the second half.

Smith at center for Randolph-Macon was outstanding on the defense, while Ferry, the scrappy Tiger end, was continually smearing jacket plays. In the opening play of the second half, Nance, of Hampden-Sydney, kicked to Randolph-Macon's 2-yard line. Beall returned the kick with a beautiful punt.

Although both teams fought desperately to gain ground in the third, neither was able to near their opponent's goal. The final period was marked by the fast running of Nance, and Formwalt was instrumental in stopping the jacket plungers. Throughout the game both teams battled for a touchdown, but neither was able to overcome their opponents' defense for a score.

OUT FOR CROSS-COUNTRY.

New Haven, Conn. (A.P.).—K. D. Warner, Yale junior who ran on the Olympic 1,600-meter relay team which set a world's record, has come out for fall cross-country competition. Only three of the nine members of the squad are seniors.

GEORGIA TIES TARHEELS AT 6-6

Lassiter's 50-Yard Run Evens Score Near Finish.

ATHENS, Ga., Oct. 15 A.P.).—Georgia and North Carolina, forced by continuous rain and a pond-like gridiron to hold almost exclusively to old-fashioned line plunging, today battled to a 6 to 6 tie on Sanford Field.

There were many breaks during the contest, due chiefly to the inability of the back field men to hold the slippery ball. Georgia took advantage of one, a bad punt by Phipps in the second period, to score a touchdown.

The Tarheels, fighting hard, appeared unable to convert Georgia's troubles to their advantage until the final period, when with only five minutes to play, Lassiter, substitute for Chanderl, caught a pass from Phipps and faced 50 yards down the side lines unmolsted for the touchdown.

Bad Punt Leads to Georgia Score.

Georgia's touchdown was scored by Grant, substituting for Buster Mott. After a Georgia punt, Davis grounded the ball on North Carolina's 10-yard line. Phipps lost a yard on the next play and then attempted to get the ball out of danger with a punt, but it was short and the ball went out of bounds on the Tarheel 28-yard line.

Grant received the ball from center and behind perfect interference on the first play after the bad kick raced the remaining yardage across the goal line. Gilmore's attempt at placement was unsuccessful.

Rain started long before the time for the game, and there was no let-up throughout the contest. There were fewer than 3,000 persons in the stands and they were drenched before the end of the first period.

Neither Georgia nor North Carolina has won a game this season and the tie today leaves them in the same status as they were before playing.

Georgia made ten first downs to three for North Carolina.

Schulte Back to Coach Nebraska Forward Wall

Lincoln, Nebr. (A.P.).—The man who made Nebraska forward walls feared by all opponents is back as the Cornhuskers' line coach.

After eight years of absence from direct contact with football, Henry F. Schulte, who developed many leading Nebraska linesmen, has returned to his old job.

Duke Sub Breaks Jinx On Grid Score Efforts

Durham, N. C. (A.P.).—Ken Abbot, reserve half back at Duke University, waited a long time for a touchdown—that counted.

Abbot's chance came in the game this year against Virginia Military Academy. During his two years of varsity football he had crossed the goal line four times with the ball, but in every case there had been a penalty and his play called back.

This year Abbot crossed the goal line after a 9-yard gain. The referee blew his whistle and Abbot dropped the ball in disgust. But this time the penalty was on the other team, and Abbot scored.

Southern Methodists Crush Syracuse, 16-6

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The wild Mustangs of Southern Methodist rushed across the gridiron here today to trample underfoot a fighting Syracuse team and emerge a 16-6 winner. Passes, against which Syracuse had prepared for a week, played only a secondary part in the Texans' victory. While the score at half time was 6-6, S. M. U. already had proved superiority by registering eight first downs to two for the Orange.

Buy U. S. Players First Motto of Blackhawks

Chicago (A.P.).—The Blackhawks, Chicago's National League hockey entry, have put on a "buy American" campaign of their own in preparation for the coming indoor season.

Of the scant dozen or so American-born players in the big pro hockey loop, seven will be with the Hawks this winter, three of them newcomers.

Burr Williams, last year with St. Louis of the American League; Emil Hanson, of Duluth, and Pudge MacKenzie, who played with the Shamrocks, Chicago American League sextet, last winter, are the new Hawks of native birth.

REBUILD ICE TEAM.

Cleveland, Ohio (A.P.).—The trading of Ken Doraty, star winger of the Cleveland Indians Hockey Team, to the Syracuse Stars for "Deacon" Waite is the first move of an effort of Manager Harry Holmes to rebuild the Cleveland Team, which finished last in the International League last season.

Real Champion

Gets Back in Jail to Defend Dishwashing Title

In fact, Adolph was so jealous of his championship record of 1,000 dishes in 20 minutes that upon his release from the house, he immediately started stealing baskets of fruit and tossing bricks through windows, in full view of policemen, so as to get back and defend his title.

He got back, with a six months' sentence for second-offense vagrancy.

Chicago Trounces Knox Eleven, 20-0

Stagg's Team in Strong Finish as Sahlin and Page Score.

Chicago, Oct. 15 (A.P..—After a slow start the University of Chicago football team pushed over three touchdowns in the last quarter to defeat Knox College, of Galesburg, Ill., 20 to 0., at Stagg Field today.

Sahlin made the first Maroon tally on the third play in the last period and added his second touchdown of the game in 15 seconds before the final gun was fired.

Page's touchdown came midway in the period. Each score was the result of continuous marches, twice from the Maroons' 45-yard line, once from Knox's 19-yard line.

EPISCOPAL'S ELEVEN IN 7-7 TIE

Air Attack in Second Half Evens Score With Staunton.

Special to The Washington Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Oct. 15.—Episcopal High and Staunton Military Academy football teams battled to a 7-to-7 tie here this afternoon before a crowd of 3,000. The game was expected to decide the State championship. Staunton was first to score, making a sustained drive from its own 40-yard line to a touchdown, Earl finally going over the goal line. Shuke booted the added point.

Episcopal tied the count on an aerial attack in the third period, featured by the pitching of Gooch and the catching of Brookings. The last named scored on a reverse play after the passes had worked the ball to Staunton's 3-yard line. Gooch tied the score with a neat drop kick.

The final whistle robbed Staunton of a good scoring chance when Bell recovered a fumbled punt on Episcopal's 5-yard line. The whistle blew after two plays had failed.

ON THE SIDELINES

by BRIAN BELL

FAILURE of Billy Papke, jr., son of the former middleweight boxing champion of the world, to win his first bout of a second attempt at fistic fame against an indifferent opponent at Hollywood, Calif., revived the old question of why sons of great battlers never have been able to attain the heights scaled by their forbears.

Twenty-four years ago, almost to the day, Papke, sr., then 22 years old, had earned the nom de guerre of the "Illinois Thunderbolt" by knocking out Stanley Ketchell in twelve rounds.

Billy, jr., started out on his initial attempt a bit more successfully, but he had not graduated from the preliminaries when a broken jaw stopped him short.

HEREDITY NO BARGAIN.

Heredity has failed to assist sons of great fighters before. The first outstanding case was Young Dutch Sam, who fought as a welter, attempting to return the name to the ring in 1916 after his father, Dutch Sam (Samuel Elias), as a lightweight had a brilliant career terminated by a knockout in 1914.

A young man named Fitzsimmons tried and failed in the attempt to revive the great name of "Ruby Robert" Fitzsimmons, one of the greatest fighters the world ever has known. Probably the most successful son of a good fighter was Tommy Kid Murphy, a lightweight.

He beat many a good scrapper until in 1927 Billy Petrolle knocked him out in three rounds. His father fought such greats as Terry McGovern, Abe Attell, Willie Ritchie, Packey McFarland, Ad Wolgast and many others of fistic prominence a score or more years ago.

HOSSES THE SAME.

John I. Day, nationally known horse racing official, admits that, unfortunately, with all the careful breeding of great thoroughbreds, the same case holds true among the great runners.

Man o' War, which Day considers the greatest horse he ever saw, although the father and grandfather of good racers, apparently left for posterity none of his own phenomenal ability.

Phar Lap, considered a wonder horse worthy of being classed with Man o' War, was a gelding, but he has a number of relatives in the thoroughbred ranks of Australia, none of which hold the promise of matching the Red Thunderbolt from "down under."

Sheep Off Pay Roll

Athletic Body Abandons Use of Stock as Mower

Stanford University, Calif. (A.P.).—A flock of sheep has been expelled from the Stanford campus and the board of athletic control lost a unique distinction when it ceased to be the owner of the herd.

A feature of the farm, as Stanford sometimes is called, was the unusual enterprise of using sheep to keep the football and other athletic fields cropped. But the sheep used more than their share of grass and became a liability.

ALEXANDRIA GRIDMEN BUSY

Fraters, Centennials in Feature Game on Schedule.

Special to The Washington Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Oct. 15.—Washington Centennials, one of the best-drilled elevens in the District of Columbia, will mix with the Alexandria Fraters on Baggett's Field tomorrow at 2:30 in the outstanding attraction here. The Fraters already have won two games this season.

"Mac" McClaren, former Del Ray star lineman, and Dug Crupper, who performed in the Celtics' back field in 1930, will make their debut with the Fraters.

Engine No. 5 Eleven at Harpers Ferry.

Engine Company No. 5 gridders, boasting two consecutive victories on the gridiron, Sunday will trek to Harpers Ferry, W. Va., for their annual game with the Harpers Ferry Fire Department warriors. The local firemen will leave from the Municipal Pool Building at 9:15 o'clock. A squad of 30 players will make the trip.

Capt. Hurley Butler probably will be on the sidelines, due to an injured shoulder from the game with Del Ray last week.

Jack Wilder's Del Ray A. C. football team will travel to Brunswick, Md., to meet the Brunswick Firefighters in their feature game on Sunday.

The feature gridiron attraction at the Shipyard Field, on South Union street, Sunday will find the Pirate warriors mixing with the Janney A. C., from Chevy Chase, D. C. Play starts at 2:30 o'clock.

Virginia Gridmen Play At Baltimore.

The Virginia A. C. will trek to Baltimore, Md., Sunday to play the Curtis Bay eleven, champions of the Oriole City loop in 1931. The team will leave here at 10:30 o'clock for the scene of the game.

The Virginia Midgets, 100-pound division champions in 1931, are seeking games. Teams interested are requested to telephone Alexandria 90-W between 7 and 7:30 o'clock at night.

On Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock the team will drill at King and Lee streets.

Last-Minute Score Beats Handley High

Special to The Washington Post.

Winchester, Va., Oct. 15.—Completing a long forward pass in the last 55 seconds of play here the Davis (W. Va.) High School eleven downed the football team of Handley High School, 6-0, in Handley Stadium today.

Richmond Noses Out Emory and Henry, 6-0

Wytheville, Va., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—"Turkey" Chaltain, fleet footed University of Richmond half, led the Spiders to a 6-to-0 victory over Emory and Henry here this afternoon in a game in which punting was freely exercised as a weapon of defense.

Chaltain's tally came in the second quarter, after an exchange of punts had been followed by the only concentrated drive of the day. Passes, line plays and end runs in rapid fire order carried the ball to the Wasps 2-yard stripe. On the next play, Chaltain, carrying the ball for the third time in succession, crossed over left tackle for the only counter of the game.

Navy Plebes Beat Kiski Eleven, 14-0

Sensational Plays Give Young Middies Both Touchdowns.

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 15.—The Naval Academy Plebes reveled in a clear-cut victory over the eleven of Kiskiminetas School of Saltsburg, Pa., in a desperately contested game here today. The score was 14 to 0. Kiski is perhaps the keenest rival of the Plebes, and one of the few teams to bring about their defeat in recent years.

The Plebes did all of their scoring in the second period, two touchdowns, from which the resultant tries for point were successful. The Navy yearlings put on a fine open attack in this session, and both of the counters were the result of sensational plays, the first being tallied on a 40-yard dash by Rankin around the visitors' left flank. Bull added the point by placement kick. A few minutes later T. King swung around Kiski's left for a sprint of 25 yards to plant the ball on the invaders' 20-yard line. Three line bucks netted 5 yards then Pratt unleashed a pass to Holman to cover the remining 15 yards for a touchdown. Bull again place kicked for the point.

Kiski made its strongest bid to score in the opening minutes of the game. A pass from Marks to Lehman was good for 20 yards to Navy's 25-yard line. Line bucks by Batdorf and Sabatino ripped off 12 yards. The Plebes' defense tightened, and Batdorf failed in a try for field gold.

Episcopal, Staunton Elevens in 7-to-7 Tie

Special to The Washington Post.

Staunton, Va., Oct. 15.—Episcopal High School of Alexandria and the Staunton Military Academy battled to a 7 to 7 tie here today in a fast game that was not decided until the final whistle blew. Nearly evenly matched, with strong passing attacks and long end runs, the two teams were well handled against strong defensive lines. An attempted goal from field off the toe of Shuker in the last seconds of play was short from the 10-yard line.

NAVY BEATEN, 14-0, BY OHIO'S PASSES

gree, and in consequence they made no serious scoring threat.

Walkup and Chung Hoon were the chief offenders in mishandling the ball, the former being especially faulty in the opening stages, two fumbles almost in succession thwarting the first drive launched at the opposition.

On the other hand, the visitors were the "Johnny boys on the spot," recovering practically every loose ball, batting down most of the Navy passes, checking Navy advances except for a few end sweeps by Chung Hoon and Walkup, and were quick to seize other opportunities.

Brown, playing tail back in the Warner system as employed by the Bobcats, was the bright particular star of the game. Not only was he a deadly passer, but he punted in splendid fashion and was a bear in the secondary defense.

The plays that figured in Ohio's scoring were the oustanding features. About midway the second period, the Bobcats struck the first damaging blow. Play had been alternating with both teams cracking at the line and off tackle, with an occasional pass and end sweep, but without much success. Finally the visitors opened wide their passing game. From midfield, Brown made a heave that was pulled down by Armbrust. The latter was thrown by Chung Hoon and Becht, just inside Navy's 10-yard line. Sadosky hit the line twice in succession for a net gain of 6 yards. Another thrust failed, and then the visitors were penalized 5 yards for delaying play. Finally, Brown whipped a diagonal pass to Corradini who was downed 1 foot from the goal line. On the next play Fehn, plunged through Navy's left side for the score. Armbrust drop kicked for the point.

Navy Starts Strongly In Third.

The Middies started the third period as though they were going places. But their spurt was not long lived, and the Bobcats again assumed the offensive, and held the ball in Navy's zone as the period ended. From Navy's 25-yard chase, a lateral pass, Sadosky to Brown, started the Bobcats on the road to their second touchdown. The Tars topped three off-tackle players, only to find Brown fading back and with great deliberateness behind a strong box defense, the Ohio star heavivng a wide pass which Sintic gathered in behind Navy's goal line. Armbrust place kicked for the extra point, making the score, Ohio 14; Navy 0.

From then on the Middies tried desperately to at least bring about a score, but the alertness and the dogged fighting spirit of the Bobcats was too much for them to master. It was a sorry showing for Navy.

but unmolested 65 yards to the touchdown. Coach Mills and the Georgetown stands roared their disapproval, but the decision stood. The referee seemed very slow about blowing that whistle.

There was something fortunate also about that last touchdown, it was Georgetown's ball in midfield near the end of the game when Costello attempted to pass to Bradley. John McDonald, one of the heroes of the Violet back field, battled the ball out of the covetous hands of the Hilltoppers and before it could hit the ground, Bill McNamara was under it and away like a 16-inch shell to Georgetown's 20-yard line. Bob McNamara, unstoppable Violet back, carried the middle of the Georgetown line on his shoulders to the 5-yard line, a play in which Walter Walcavage, Hoya lineman, was carried off the field unconscious. John McDonald butted it across.

But there was no fluke about the four Violet touchdowns of the first half. The first one came six minutes after the start of the game. N. Y. U. did not relinquish the ball from the time Sawaya kicked off to Bob McNamara on N. Y. U.'s 12-yard line to the last stripe.

McNamara Plunges Across Goal.

Temple and McNamara were the forces of that first successful offensive on the rushing plays, and Capt. Bob Lamark helped mightily when he gathered in a beautiful 20-yard pass from McNamara which put the ball in Georgetown territory for the first time. Successive backs, hurled with thunderbolt force against the Hoya front wall, took the pigskin to the 2-yard line, from which point McNamara running, catapulating from kick formation, burst across the line.

N. Y. U. scored again in the next three minutes when an exchange of kicks gave them the ball on Georgetown's 48-yard line. McNamara stormed around end for a first down on Georgetown's 29-yard line. Temple hit center to the 15-yard line and then Temple took it for the touchdown around left end, his yard-thick wall of interference blotting up the entire right side of Georgetown's line.

Hilltop Kick Blocked On 2-Yard Line.

The aggressive line play of the victors was responsible for the third touchdown. The entire Violet line beat their way through to snuff out Mack Stanley's kick and Debenedictis recovered for N. Y. U. on Georgetown's 2-yard line as the quarter closed.

Temple hurdled and piled up lines to score on the first play of the second period, and when Jim Tanguay, who was playing something of a minor role missed the placement, the score was 19-0 for N. Y. U.

Basilo Marchi, N. Y. U. guard, paved the way for his team's fourth touchdown by recovering Mack Stanley's fumble on his own 37-yard line. Tanguay, operating on all cylinders, personally conducted the tour down the field, climaxing the drive by sweeping around end on an unbalanced line play that seemed to stun Georgetown.

The half whistle found N. Y. U. once more hammering at the Georgetown goal on the 6-yard line in fact, after a great leg drive from near midfield, but the whistle did what Georgetown could not.

Al Kelly and the rest of the Hoya 10 seconds back field men were exterminated throughout the game. There was no resisting the offensive power of N. Y. U. today and all but foolhardy to test the N. Y. U. defensive.

Charlottesville Fives Easy for Greenbrier

Special to The Washington Post.

Lewisburg, W. Va., Oct. 15.—Greenbrier Military School overcame a trick offensive featuring a strong passing attack to defeat the Charlottesville School for Boys, 51 to 0, here today. Greenbrier used plenty of long end runs for most of its gains.

The visitors completed eleven passes, but could not work beyond the 20-yard line. For the Charlottesville Fives, the work of Capt. Keller, Payne, Wright and O'Neill was outstanding, while Greenbrier stars were Sneed and Freddie Jasper.

MRS. HAYNES DOWNS MRS. MECKLEY IN FINALS, 4 AND 2

Indian Spring Star Keeps Crown

Special to The Washington Post.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 15.—Mrs. J. Marvin Haynes, of the Columbia Country Club, today became the second linkswoman to win the Middle Atlantic Association two years in succession.

The hard-hitting Washington star conquered Mrs. Betty P. Meckley, a fellow townswoman, who represents the Indian Spring Golf Club, in the final of the seventh annual sectional title competition at the Rodgers Forge course, by four and two, and retained the crown she won last year in the Capital.

The only other champion to win two years hand running was Mrs. E. Boyd Morrow, of Elkridge, who triumphed in 1926 and 1927, the first two years the event was played. Mrs. Morrow was eliminated in the semifinal round of the current championship.

Mrs. Haynes was altogether too steady for Mrs. Meckley today in the eighteen-hole final. The former got away the better drives, excelled in approaching and used far less putts than Mrs. Meckley.

Mrs. Meckley's Putting Off.

Indeed, if it had not been for Mrs. Meckley's three-putt greens in the outward round, the probabilities are that the battle would have been a great deal closer, or even of an altogether different complexion.

After staging a belated rally and winning two holes in a row to reduce Mrs. Haynes' advantage to three holes, Mrs. Meckley foundered completely at the sixteenth hole. Her tee shot was far off line, directly behind the barn, and she had to remove a pile of walnuts to get a clear shot. Mrs. Haynes, on the other hand, was right down the middle with her tee effort.

Using an iron, Mrs. Meckley did not hit the ball cleanly and it traveled only 10 yards to a clump of bushes behind a hedge. Realizing that she did not have a chance to win the hole, the Indian Spring player conceded the hole and the match.

The cards:

Mrs. Haynes—
Out .... 5 5 4 6 3 6 6 4 5—44
Mrs. Meckley—
Out .... 5 5 5 6 4 4 5 4 6—44
Mrs. Haynes—
In 5 4 4 4 6 7 5
Mrs. Meckley—
In .... 6 5 5 6 5 5 x

The first two holes of the match were halved in 5s, although both had final openings for wins. Mrs. Meckley three-putted the first green and Mrs. Haynes, after getting on the second nicely in three, had to stroke twice to get down. However, the champion won the third hole, to become 1 up, when Mrs. Meckley again three-putted. Mrs. Haynes also took the fifth, winning with a par 3, and increased her lead to two holes. Mrs. Meckley was in the trap with her tee shot.

Match Is Evened On Fifth.

Then Mrs. Meckley braced to win the next two holes and even the match. Mrs. Haynes was trapped at the sixth, and at the seventh she three-putted. Mrs. Meckley had two fine second shots at each of these holes.

After they halved the eighth with fours, neither getting on with their drives, Mrs. Haynes took the ninth and made the turn 1 up. Mrs. Meckley was on nicely in three, but required more than the orthodox number of puts.

Mrs. Haynes fired par golf at Mrs. Meckley after the turn, and the latter was not steady enough to answer the challenge. The Columbia star won thirteenth, getting fours on the last three holes, to go 5 up. Mrs. Meckley was erratic at each of these stretches.

Five down and five to go, Mrs. Meckley uncorked two fine wooden shots at the fourteenth to win the hole with a 5, and she also took the fifteenth when Mrs. Haynes drove her third shot out of bounds. It appeared to the gallery that Mrs. Meckley had a chance, even at this late stage, but she tossd the match away at the sixteenth with a bad tee shot.

Other results:

THIRD FLIGHT—Mrs. W. B. Brooks, Jr. (Elkridge), defeated Mrs. T. M. Ramseur (Elkridge), 3 and 2.

CONSOLATION.

FIRST FLIGHT—Mrs. M. L. Bell (Rodgers Forge), defeated Mrs. J. Sloman (Suburban), 1 up.

SECOND FLIGHT—Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg (Rolling Road), defeated Mrs. B. C. Hartie (Manor), 4 and 2.

Seat Pleasant Plays Martinsburg Eleven

Gen. Pelham D. Glassford, superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department, will be guest of honor today at the football game between the visiting Hose Company No. 5 team, of Martinsburg, W. Va., and Maryland Athletic Club, which will be played at Seat Pleasant at 2:30 o'clock. Mayor Hiram O. Acuff of Seat Pleasant, who extended the invitation to Glassford, was with the latter during the war overseas.

Another notable who is coming with the visitors is Hack Wilson, slugging outfielder of the Brooklyn Robins, who is manager of the Hose Company team. Wilson does not play but takes a great interest in the grid game.

A big day is planned by the committee in charge of the affair. The Od Fellows Band, a 24-piece outfit, will play.

Entered in the Independent League, the Maryland aggregation played the Seamon Gunners to a scoreless tie last week. E. Carrack, R. Carrack, Bertilino, Si Ball, Simmons, Howe, Eggleson, Burkehead, Butler, Kolley and Eddie Ratdke will start for the home team.

LOWELL TEXTILE WINS.

Lowell, Mass., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Lowell Textile remained unbeaten and unscored on today by defeating Brooklyn College, 25 to 0. Capt. Jerry Savard featured the Textile attack with several long runs from scrimmage, including an 80-yard dash for a touchdown in the second period.

WASH. & LEE IS EASY FOR KENTUCKY

Wildcats Advance Almost at Will to Cop, 53-7.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Kentucky won its fourth straight game of its All-Southern Conference schedule here today, overwhelming the Washington and Lee eleven, 53 to 7.

Against the Virginia Generals, the Bluegrass Wildcats were able to execute a series of forward passes for timely gains and to smash through the line almost at will, while Johnson and Bach each made long broken-field runs. Johnson ripped off an 82-yard run to score, and each made one of 70 and another of 65 yards.

Generals Score in Third Period.

The only score the Generals made came in the third period against a flock of Kentucky substitutes, but Coach Gamage sent seven regulars back into play and they quickly rolled up two more touchdowns.

The Generals, aided by a 15-yard penalty for an illegal tackle, carried the ball to Kentucky's 1-yard line early in the first period, chiefly on line smashes by Jones and Bacon's 15-yard run around right end and on a criss-cross play, but Kentucky stopped Seaton's plunge at the line and the ball went over.

After that the Wildcat backs, with excellent interference, smashed the line, circled ends, and fired forward passes to swamp the visitors, putting over one touchdown in the first, four in the second, two in the third and one in the final period.

Louisiana Golf Champ Lands Arkansas Trophy

It is the cup of the Hardscrabble Country Club invitation tournament which he won here after defeating Curtis Collier, Fort Smith ace, 1 up at the nineteenth hole in the final match.

McClure became the second medalist in the history of the Hardscrabble tournament to win the title. Collier was runner-up to McClure for both the medal and title honors.

Coach Lynn Waldorf explains the new color does away with floodlight glare that bothered punt and pass receivers. Instead of orange jerseys the Aggies will now wear white.

G. W. Invades Oklahoma to Play Tulsa

SATURDAY.

Here—Georgetown vs. Western Maryland, at Griffith Stadium.

Away—George Washington vs. Tulsa, at Tulsa.

GEORGETOWN and Maryland play at home, Catholic University makes its second excursion to New York, and George Washington University goes deep into the Southwest—to account for Washington Big Four football doings this coming Saturday.

Georgetown meets a perennial foe in Western Maryland at Griffith Stadium, Catholic University tests its mettle against the big and vigorous Manhattan College eleven. George Washington runs up against that sleight-of-hand team known as Tulsa University, and Maryland takes on a within-the State opponent in Johns Hopkins.

Western Maryland Not as Strong.

Western Maryland, somewhat shorn of its 1929-to-1931 reputation, when it was known and acted like Green Terrors, comes to Griffith Stadium with a team that was held to an unexpected 13-to-13 draw by the unsung Marshall College team. Georgetown was one of the first teams to stand up before Western Maryland and upset its vast reputation, sending the Terrors skidding down to a 25-to-7 defeat last year.

Catholic University's Cardinals have only a vague idea as to what they are running into against Manhattan. Chick Meehan, Manhattan coach, renounced his intention of being a party to high-pressure football tactics last year when quitting N. Y. U., but rumor has it that the Manhattan squad shows many new human oak trees who became eligible by going to summer school. Manhattan has yet to lose a game in four, bowling over four minor foes without trouble.

Maryland Gets Rest Against St. John's.

Maryland should have something of a much-deserved rest against St. John's, after those V. P. I. and Duke games. The Johnnies of Annapolis have nothing very sensational in the way of football players this year.

George Washington, on its—or any other local school's—longest trip of the year, will run up against the same sort of play which astounded the Colonials and thousands of fans last year at Griffith Stadium. Tulsa, after dropping a 7-to-0 decision to Oklahoma in the first game of the season, has come back strongly and swept Washburn and Phillips into oblivion with its strange assortment of aerial maneuvers.

St. John's Triumphs Over St. Joseph's, 9-0

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 15.—St. John's College defeated St. Joseph's College, of Philadelphia, in a listless gridiron struggle here today by a score of 9 to 0. The score was made up of a touchdown, point, and safety.

The Johnnies started the game with a revamped line-up, Coach Todis Riggs not being satisfied with some of the regulars in recent performances, but the mentor early found it necessary to call on the more experienced men in order to put zip into the offense. The teams battled through a slow first period, without either developing a threat. In the second period, however, when the Johnnie regulars were called from the bench, the visitors, for a while, were played off their feet.

McCartee started things by blocking Daugherty's punt and recovering the ball on St. Joseph's 45-yard line. Off tackle thrusts by Boucher and McCartee and St. John's soon had the ball inside of St. Joseph's 25-yard chalk. The visitors braced somewhat, and on third down, Drake made a quick fade and passed to McCartee behind the goal line for a touchdown. McCartee also made good on the point via placement kick. The safety was scored near the end of the game when Cassassa batted down Zuber's attempted pass into the end zone.

Brazil Olympic Stars To Air Grievances

Rio de Janeiro (A.P.).—The Itaquice, Brazil's Olympic ship, is back home after a three-month round trip and the National Sports Federation has a lot of investigating to do.

It will delve into charges of officials that some of the Brazilian swimmers and water polo players were undisciplined, and study the water polo row in which the Brazilians attacked the referee of the Brazil-Germany match.

It also will take up charges of several of the swimmers that Romeu Pecanha, in charge of the water sports, and Orlando da Silva, team captain, failed to attend to training and financial necessities.

The entire question of financial difficulties will be gone into. Several of the athletes have charged they were unable to train because of lack of finances.

SPEAKING OF TENNIS

By BOB CONSIDINE

CADET DOLPH MUEHLEISEN, District tennis champion and spearhead of the Army Leech Cup tennis team (but not the champion of the Army), is a cadet no longer, a diploma having been thrust upon him last Friday at Kelly Field, San Antonio, Tex.

Which is fine, of course, but by giving him a diploma the Army saws off the limb it has been sitting on. In these days of depression the Army has decided that it will give regular second lieutenant jobs only to graduates of West Point, the rest of the boys getting on reserve ratings. Muehleisen is a graduate of the University of California.

Now he can't play with the Leech Cup team. The rules of that annual match between the Army and Navy for a massive affair of silver put in competition in 1924 by Abner Y. Leech, local ordnance tycoon, state that reserve officers are not permitted to compete. Muehleisen is now a reserve officer, and the Army's chances of breaking Navy's hold on the cup seem to be about on a par with the classic snowball of the nether regions.

Eligibility Reversed by Status.

Here's another funny angle to the business. For two years now Muehleisen has been kept out of the Army singles and doubles championship by a somewhat nitwit order which bars enlisted men. Reserve officers, however, may play—so that now the beautiful stroking Californian can play in the Army tournament and not in the Leech Cup, just the reverse of his former endeavors.

Now that he has something to say about it himself, he'll probably decide to remain entirely out of the rather childish atmosphere of Army-Navy tennis, with its petty class distinctions and never entirely cordial relations between the players themselves.

Dan Ellis, editor of the expired magazine, Tennis, was in Washington last week and recalled some of his "ghosting" duties. In one issue he was Ellsworth Vines, Mercer Beasley and Henri Cochet, besides editing the entire magazine, arranging its beautiful art layouts, writing his own column, "Off the Wood," and placating the righteous tennis officials who wanted their names in the magazine more frequently.

Starting in January, 1931, Perry competed in the Coupe de Noel, in Paris, then a journey to Bermuda and Jamaica in February, following which he returned to Paris in March for a Paris-London match. Early in April he moved over to the Davis Cup trials at Queens, won a hard-court title at Bournemouth the end of that month, and in May competed in the Harrogate tournament, played with England against Roumania in the Davis Cup matches, and engaged in the French championship. Toward the end of the month of May he was playing against Poland, in Warsaw. Late June and the first part of July found him at Wimbledon, and at Berlin toward the end of the month for the Davis Cup match against Germany. He was back in England in late July, played a week at Harrow and another at Scarborough, and then embarked for America.

South Africa Is Next.

In this country he played at Rye, Newport and Boston in August, at Forest Hill, Los Angeles and San Francisco in September and will hardly have time to come across the continent and leave for a four-month tour of South Africa. He will return in March, just in time to start the 1933 Davis Cup matches.

Here indeed is the high road of easy living. Perry should emulate our own national champion, Mr. Vines, who put his fellow tennis vagabonds to shame this year by completing almost a full half semester of school work before hopping back on the bandwagon again.

DROPSHOTS.

Dooly Mitchell is teaching history at Georgetown . . . Miss Billie Maxwell and Clyde Yeomans were welded September 29 . . . Time, the magazine, wants to know if the 20-18 set Eddie Yeomans played Eddie Burns in the national singles is a record . . . and S. Wallis Merrihew says it isn't, there being one of 21-19 dimensions played many years ago . . . Clarence Charest turned down the testimonial dinner which was plotted for him.

Wisconsin Giant Plays In Almost All Positions

Madison, Wis. (A.P.).—Big John Schneller has made a round trip, from end to end, of the University of Wisconsin football line-up.

The Neenah (Wis.) giant, standing 6 feet 3 and weighing 195 pounds, came to the State university with a prep reputation as an end, doing only occasional duty in the back field.

As a freshman here he played end, but Glenn Thistlewaite, then Badger head coach, moved him to full back, where he performed through his sophomore and junior seasons.

Early this fall he was tried at center, where the current squad is weak, but when a newcomer showed up for the pivot job Schneller was sent back to his original post at end and Coach Doc Spears expects to keep him there for his final year of varsity competition.

PRIZE TO BISONS.

Ray Schalk's Buffalo club, of the International League, was awarded the official $1,000 prize for being the "best hustling" team in the league.

TULANE TIES VANDERBILT IN RAIN

Runs by Zimmerman and Burton Score in 6-6 Draw.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Two great teams of the Southern Conference fought desperately but vainly for advantage here today as Tulane, conference champion, and Vanderbilt played a 6-6 tie before 25,000 wildly cheering fans.

Vanderbilt organized an offensive into Tulane's territory early in the first period when Henderson's quick kick rolled dead to the Tulane 10-yard line and Zimmerman punted back poorly to midfield, Dixie Roberts receiving to run the ball back to the Green's 40-yard. Roberts shortly afterward broke away for 20 yards around Tulane's left end being forced out of bounds on Tulane's 20-yard line. An offside called Roberts back on the next play after he had run around right end to Tulane's 1-yard line.

Roberts was stopped on successive tries at the ends and Tulane took the ball on downs on its own 15-yard line as a fresh downpour struck the field. After Zimmerman, the Tulane ace, had been thrown for a 10-yard loss, he punted to his own 43-yard line. Vandy lost the ball on downs on Tulane's 34-yard line and Zimmerman punted into Vandy's territory.

Roberts' Punt Falls Dead.

Roberts punted dead to the Tulane 4-yard line as the quarter ended with the ball in Tulane's possession.

Score: Vanderbilt, 0; Tulane, 0.

Fortune intercepted Zimmerman's pass to Hardy on the Vanderbilt 39-yard line to lead to Vanderbilt's touchdown. After an exchange of punts Zimmerman took a punt from Roberts on Tulane's 45-yard line, circled right end, reversed his field behind perfect interference and ran 55 yards for a touchdown. Zimmerman missed a place-kick for the extra point.

Score: Vanderbilt, 0; Tulane, 6.

In the third period Powell intercepted Zimmerman's pass to Simons on Vandy's 37-yard line. Robert was thrown for a 11-yard loss as he tried to pass. He then punted deep into Tulane territory. Simons' next punt slid off his toe out of bounds on Tulane's 30-yard line and Roberts skirted left end to Tulane's 21-yard line. There Tulane held, taking the ball on downs. Simons punted poorly again and it was Vandy's ball on Tulane's 38-yard line. Burton, Vanderbilt's substitute quarter, swept right end to Tulane's 11-yard line as the quarter ended.

Score: Vanderbilt, 0; Tulane, 6.

On the Tulane 11-yard line Burton lost 5 yards on a fumble and on the next play swept left end for 16 yards and a touchdown. Beasley, Vandy substitute, failed to kick the point from placement and the score was tied 6-all.

Mercury Battles Seaman Gunners

Held to a tie by the Maryland Athletic Club in its opening game last week, the Seaman Gunners team will strive to break into the win column today when it clashes with Mercury on Gonzaga Field at 3 o'clock in an Independent League engagement. Mercury lost a 7-to-0 decision to the Marions last week and a victory would be balsam for the Southwest team's wound.

The Brookland-Meridian game features the 150-pound division, and St. Stephen's tussle with the Northeast Trojans is the standout attraction in the 135-pound class. The schedule follows:

UNLIMITED LEAGUE.

150-POUND CLASS.

DOWN the FAIRWAY
by DAVE HERMAN

ELABORATE preparations are being made by the Kenwood Golf and Country Club for the most notable golf event of the season in this section—the $2,500 National Capital Open on November 12 and 13.

Inaugurated last season by Kenwood, this rich tournament attracted like a magnet sterling professionals from practically every State and proved the greatest competition of its type in the Middle Atlantic sector since Long Jim Barnes blazed around the Columbia Country Club back in 1921 with a brilliant 289 to beat out Walter Hagen and Freddie McLeod for the prized national open championship.

Kenwood officials should be given plenty of credit for this undertaking. It means lots of work for them, expense, and naturally, a certain amount of worry. Considering the remarkable job these men did last year, there is every reason to believe that success will crown their 1932 efforts. It might be added that the National Capital Open is a great advertising boost for District golf.

In the 1931 classic here, 150 pros and amateurs participated, with Willie MacFarlane, the Tuckahoe, N. Y., stylist, shooting the 54 holes in 214, four above par, to capture first prize money. The former British and American open champion, Tommy Armour, was six strokes back in a deadlock with Sol DiBuno, of New York.

Present indications are that an even greater field than last year will vie. That the big shots are keen about carrying off the shekels offered by Kenwood is evidenced in the list of those who already have filed their entries with checks. With less than 30 days before the first 18 holes will be played, Al Houghton, the Kenwood live spark, has actually received entries from close to 30 stars. All of which adds to the sum of human joy, especially where Houghton is concerned.

Walter Hagen to Compete Here.

Houghton is in receipt of a letter from Bob Harlow, manager of the greatest showman in golf—Walter "The Haig" Hagen.

"By all means count on us," Harlow stated in his letter.

Hagen has won more important titles than any other man, living or dead, and his presence alone is enough to lure thousands of golf fans to the scene of battle. The man who has thrilled the hearts of galleryites and is famous for his ability to squeeze out of the most perilous situations in a tournament, last week demonstrated that his fighting heart and ability are still with him by his par-cracking triumph in the St. Louis Open at Detroit. His winning 281 total, included a 69 and 65 on the last 36 holes. His 65 was six under orthodox figures.

French open, 1920.

North and South, 1919, 1923 and 1924.

Among others who have definitely entered are: Billy Burke, of Greenwich, Conn., 1931 open title holder; Tommy Armour, of Detroit, former British and American open champion; Johnny Farrell, of Quaker Ridge, the best dressed man in golf, whose victorious national open play-off with Bobby Jones at Olympia Fields in 1928 is an outstanding event in golf history; Joe, Phil and Mike Turnesa, Sol. DiBuno, A. Watrous, Detroit; Ed Dudley, of Wilmington, Del.; Lighthorse Harry Cooper, of Chicago; Johnny Golden, of Connecticut; Wiffy Cox, of Brooklyn; Willie MacFarlane; Tony Manero; Gene Sarazen, present British and American open champion; Denny Shute, of Columbia; Tom Creavy, of Albany, N. Y., 1931 P. G. A. title holder; Horton Smith, the former Joplin, Mo., ghost, now with a Detroit club; Ab and Al Espinosa, of Chicago; "Wild Bill" Melhorn, of New York; Tommy Kerrigan, Jimmy Martucci, Patty Doyle, John Kinder, Charlie Guest, Craig Wood and Paul Runyon.

Twelve Money Prizes to Be Offered.

With such an imposing professional list, one can readily see what an outstanding event the Kenwood tournament is going to be. George Voigt, former District title holder; T. Philip Perkins, the former British star, and Billy Howell, of Virginia, have indicated they will be present.

Twelve prizes will be dangling before the eyes of the pros when they set out in quest of honors; $700 is first prize, $500 second, $350 third and $250 fourth.

A few days after the National Capital, the golfers will swing on to Pinehurst for the Midsouth, November 16 and 17. The $10,000 Miami Biltmore will send them into the Everglades on November 23 and 24. So, the Kenwood classic will be the first outstanding event before the Southern crusade.

At the entrance to Kenwood, along the River road, there is a huge sign that is certainly pretentious enough to let any one know that an important tournament will be held there. Inside the clubhouse an army of workmen is laboring to make the place attractive. Additional locker rooms and a club grill have been established. Committees are meeting twice each week to perfect plans. They want it to be a perfect tournament. A. M. Ferry, Donald L. Chamberlain, Al Houghton and C. P. Grady are active figures in the event.

Mackenzie's Decision No Shock To Pros.

Roland Mackenzie's decision to enter the professional ranks, while news to his amateur friends, was no surprise to several District pros with whom he conferred shortly before making known his plans. Roland, it was learned, had been anxious for a long time to quit the simon-pure class, but waited until he regained his health and polished up on his golf game. The former Walker Cup star is limbering up down South, and expects to make his pro debut in the National Capital open.

Dame Rumor hath it that Roland is being groomed for the professional post at Bobby Jones' ideal course, the Augusta National Golf Club, Augusta, Ga. Bobby is very fond of Mac, his friends report, having captained the Walker Cup Team when Roland was a member. The course may be opened in the next month or so. If Roland gets the post, and it is not at all impossible, it certainly will be a tribute to his golf prowess.

As one professional close to Mac put it: "Roland should make an excellent pro; his decision to turn pro was a wise one."

More power to Roland Mackenzie.

The Middle Atlantic professional match play tournament opens tomorrow at Maryland Country Club, with Cliff MacKimmie, of the Fountain Head Club, Hagerstown, Md., seeking to retain the crown he won from Bob Barnett, Chevy Chase tutor, last year at Woodmont. It is a safe bet to say that Glenn Spencer, on whose course the three-day tournament will be conducted, is a ranking contender for the title, having the reputation of being a marvel over his home links. Again this column warns you: "Watch this Houghton."

District Club Champions In Tourney.

Early next month the golf champions of various District clubs will assemble at Kenwood to decide who is the best champion. This is a novel event and promises to carry plenty of interest. It will bring together a bevy of seasoned warriors. There will be Miller B. Stevenson, Columbia's "war horse;" Harry G. Pitt, the "Moose" from Manor; Dr. Larry Otell, of Indian Spring, who qualified in the national public links championship at East Potomac some years back; Johnny Miller, of Beaver Dam; William P. DiEste, cross-handed expert from Argyle; Maj. R. K. Sutherland, big gun from Army and Navy, and Forrest Thompson, of Kenwood.

This afternoon Woodmont's champion will be crowned after the finals between Howard Nordlinger and Milton Harris. Nordlinger is the ranking golfer at Woodmont, and will be hard to beat. He is a veteran. Harris started playing golf a little more than two years ago, and has made remarkable progress. One day he hits a hot pace. The next he flounders along the traps and bunkers.

A former athlete from the Northwest, holder of several college degrees, including a Ph. D., Harris' first important golf title awaits him today—should he win. A friend of Don Moe, Frank Dolp and a host of other golf stars from Oregon, Harris took up golf for the fun of it, but made such rapid strides that he decided to take it seriously. A. B. Thorn put him on the right path, gave him careful instructions, and Harris is considered a topnotcher at Woodmont today.

Georgetown Prep School is astir with golf activity. It's all due to the untiring efforts of Frank Emmet, coach. Frank is the guiding spirit in the handicap tournament, driving contest, pitch, putting and ringer events. Only youngsters not out for football are asked to participate. Thirty-nine names are on the handicap list at the school, although 24 play daily over the Georgetown Prep course.

Nee and Dettweiler Members Of Team.

The Manor star, Maurice Nee, 17-year old District junior champion, is the ranking player. He must play from scratch. Billy Dettweiler, 14-year-old star, has a No. 2 handicap. The school is full of good golf talent.

Emmet is arranging matches with various clubs and schools. Wednesday a team from Manor will be played, a team from Congressional will be encountered around the end of the month, and a match is pending with Woodmont. Takoma-Silver Spring High also is on the schedule.

Nee, Dettweiler and Frank Allan, captain of the school team, who hails from the Fox Hill Country Club, Pittson, Pa., are entered in the National Capital open at Kenwood. Allan last summer won the Williamsport open from a field of 150 golfers.

District clubs would do well to arrange matches with Georgetown Prep. There are no schools around here which could offer the team any competition, hence Emmet must look to the clubs to give the boys battle.

James Ferguson, of Rockville, Md., who won the fifth annual handicap tournament last week, waded through a fast field. He beat a worthy finalist in Frank Carey, of Olympia Fields, Chicago.

The new District senior golf champion, Homer S. Pope, did himself proud in leading his nearest competitor and, incidentally the 1931 ruler, Percival S. Ridsdale, by four strokes after the 36 hole grind at Woodmont Wednesday. His round of 80 was nothing to sneeze at on a day when the high wind blew shots into wrong directions and played havoc with putts.

Called "One Putt Pope" at Home Course.

Around his home course, Indian Spring, Mr. Pope is quite famous as a putter. They call him "One Putt Pope," because of his uncanny ability to fire true to his mark when on the green. A steady golfer with a fine all-round game, and capable of playing in the seventies, Mr. Pope is a fitting successor to his senior friend from Chevy Chase.

In connection with the senior tournament, there has been talk of dropping it unless greater interest is shown and larger fields turn out. There were 16 in last week's event where easily 50 should have participated. Chevy Chase has a large senior membership, active, too, but few showed up for the championship. The small field was disappointing in the eyes of Dr. W. C. Barr, secretary, and his cohorts.

Real spirit and fight were displayed by one of Washington's pioneer golf players—Dr. George E. Truett, who will reach his seventy-ninth birthday in February. One of the oldest members of the Washington Golf and Country Club, Dr. Truett tramped about the course smiling all the time, and studying his shots most carefully to card 99-96. He has been playing golf for 30 years, and years ago was club champion of his course. His best score, he recalls, was a 72.

Capital's Social Season Starts Full Swing Early

Entertainment for American Bar Has Set Ball Rolling Which Society Is Loth to Halt. Vassar Alumni to Meet.

CAPITAL society, roused last week by an early opening of the season due to the meeting of American Bar Association, now finds itself in full swing. The round of luncheons, teas, dinners, receptions, dances and supper parties arranged for the visitors has so stimulated members of society that they are loath to return again to that state of relaxed inertia which always has a hold on them after summer vacations.

Though this week will not be as strenuous as was last week, the ball has been started rolling, and will not stop until Lent. Politics and the hectic excitement of the campaigns will keep everybody at topnotch fever until after the election, and social gatherings will be of the brilliant-conversation variety.

Already the chief topic is Mrs. Nicholas Longworth's series of articles which are appearing in a monthly magazine, the first of which was released Friday. In spite of her refusal to speak for President Hoover, her writings are splendid, indirect campaign material. The President and Mrs. Hoover, after a week of public appearances, left yesterday for Cleveland, where the President last evening made his second political speech of the campaign. They will return to the White House today for a brief and much-needed rest.

The National Capital in Bicentennial year is more than an appropriate scene for the Vassar Alumnae semiannual meeting to be held this week. The other one was held on the campus of that college. Graduates from the Civil War period to the present day are numbered in their ranks. In the 70s, the donor of the Shakespeare Memorial Library, Mrs. Folger was one of the graduating class, and fittingly enough, other daughters of Vassar for 60-odd years will be welcomed in that glorious archetype of memorials on the first day of their arrival in the city. Its director, Mr. William I. Slade, whose wife is an active member of the Associate Alumnae of Vassar, will escort them through the building with Mrs. Slade, explaining the many features by which it is distinguished.

Following the registration at the Shoreham Hotel, Mrs. Hoover hopes to receive the alumnae at the White House at noon. A luncheon at the Carlton, with Miss Helen Zartman, the president of the local branch, presiding will be tendered the visitors by the Capital City alumnae. Miss Mildred McAfee, newly appointed executive secretary of the National Associate Alumnae, will make an address of welcome. The afternoon will be devoted to sight-seeing drives about the city, and a dinner at the Shoreham at 7:30 o'clock in the west ballroom, at which Dr. Harold Moulton, of the Brookings Institution, will deliver an address, will conclude the day.

On Saturday the forenoon will be given over to the business meeting of the association, a new president to be elected, and a luncheon, with Mrs. Lucy Madeira Wing presiding, will have for its speaker Mr. David Lawrence.

There will be a tea at 4 o'clock Saturday at the home of Mrs. Wing, at "Greenway," Fairfax County, Va., and a final diner will take place that evening, in honor of President of Vassar College and Mrs. MacCracken, in the Chinese room of the Mayflower at 7:30 o'clock. Maj. Julia Stimson, chief of the United States Army Nurse Corps, and a member of the class of 1901, will preside, presenting President MacCracken and Dean C. Mildred Thompson as speakers.

An invitation to this dinner is extended to parents of alumnae as well as of prospective students at Vassar, in order that they may come into personal contact with its president.

Interesting and historic churches of the city will be visited by the Vassar Daughters next Sunday, President Hoover's being among them, and for that afternoon, the renewing of old ties and recounting of happy hours will be set in numerous home dinner parties, where classmates will foregather "to talk the marvel o'er."

The last scene of all this brief, but colorful period, will be the tea at the

THAT Extra FAT
Reflects on Your Intelligence
Abnormal figures, in these days, have small excuse. They blight beauty, health and vim. Modern science has discovered that a great cause lies in a lacking factor, easily supplied. Doctors the world over now prescribe that factor. And excess fat has, to millions, become a trouble of the past.
Marmola prescription tablets are based on that lacking factor. A famous medical laboratory prepares them to supply this new-day treatment in an easy, economical way. People have used it for 25 years—millions of boxes of it. Now one sees the happy results in almost every circle.
You should know Marmola. Go ask your druggist for a box, if you over-weigh. Read the book in the box to know exactly how and why it acts. Watch the results—get back to normal. Then tell the results to your friends.
Do this now. Don't carry this great risk and burden longer. You will always be glad when you know the truth about a treatment which is easy, scientific, real.

Textile Color Card Controls Fashion Hues

By DARE.

THE gods were in an expansive mood when they gave color to mere mortals. Just imagine, if you can even conceive it, what the world would be without color—if everything we saw was just a shade of black, white or gray. I wonder what particular and terrible crime was committed in some previous incarnation by the person who is completely color blind. Yes, there are people to whom the world is just a series of grays and blacks, and certain other people are unable to see certain single colors. This is due to an incomplete nerve connection somewhere between the retina of the eye and the recording surface of the brain—but, then, let's not get tech-nickel.

Color is a vibration, but of course! And it is the different lengths of those light vibrations that are interpreted to the brain as different colors. Likewise, the different degrees of intensity of each wave length give us our different shades. Ah, how important it is for even the lay person to realize what shades of a color are and what tints or tones are!

Just imagine, were 50 persons in a room told to think of one color—say red—and made to define that color, each one of them would be thinking of red in a different shade. Even as each of these people, were they told to do so, would be thinking of the same tune in a different degree of sound intensity. The mother soul would be crooning it, the politician would be mentally shouting it, the peppery little person would be chopping each note as though it were staccato, the artist would be adding flourishes and degrees of emotionalism that would make the very composer fail to recognize it. That is what a shade of color is—a different degree of intensity, but all the same color without the addition of another color.

A shade is a color which is either lightened with white or darkened with black, and this black and this white may be either transparent or opaque. Thus a transparent shade of red is a transparent, jewel-like pink while an opaque shade of red is a pastel pink—Comprenez?

Now, there are just three colors that cannot be achieved with the mixing of two or three other colors. These colors are red, yellow and blue (Chemists, out of my life!) These are called the primary colors and are usually made directly from either a chemical deposit or a plant. So-o-o-o. Then the secondary colors are those that can be achieved by the mixing of two of these primary colors. They are orange, green and purple. Hold everything, I mean without the addition of white or black.

White, by the way, is the luminous combination of all color, with no one color more defined than any other. Look—for an example; an egg white seems white, doesn't it? Chalk seems white. But chalk is thick, therefore a different white from the white of the egg, which is transparent. Egg white, transparent. Chalk, opaque. Both white.

Black is the absence of all color—read it again!

Black is the combination of all transparent colors—read it again. C'mon, any artist who tries to tell me that the combination of all colors makes gray—and why does it make gray when you combine all your colors on your pallette, sir? Because some of them are opaque, and black and opaque white makes gray!

So-o-o-o-o, white is the luminous combination of all color, black the absence of all color; gray the combination of black and white; the three primary colors are those that cannot be made by mixing any other colors; secondary colors are two primary colors mixed in exact degrees, and all the shades and tones are achieved by mixing colors and adding black or white!

The only reason the combining of all colors of paint or dye apparently makes black instead of white, when black is really the absence instead of presence of all colors, is because in combining all colors they lose their identity and become no longer colors. When black is illuminated, it becomes white, or the "luminous combination of all colors."

Every one should comprehend just that much about colors, whether they are engaged in artistic pursuits or not, for that amount of color knowledge is necessary simply because we use colors in everyday life.

Now, I mustn't forget that to you I "ain't not" a famous artiste, yet—so must tell you about color only from the style angle.

First, do you know that a number of quite, quite famous persons gather twice a year to select the colors for the world for the following style season? Indeed, and they include medical men, astrologists, the leaders of the style industry and a representative of every branch of it, and I-don't know whatever else! Oh, indeed, and then a what is called "textile color card" is issued to all interested in colors. From this they select and add to colors suited to their own particular industry. That is why, when blue is the color note of a season, you are able to buy blue shoes while the fad lasts, and not after it is all over.

More of color for you anon. Meanwhile, please study this much about color, won't you?

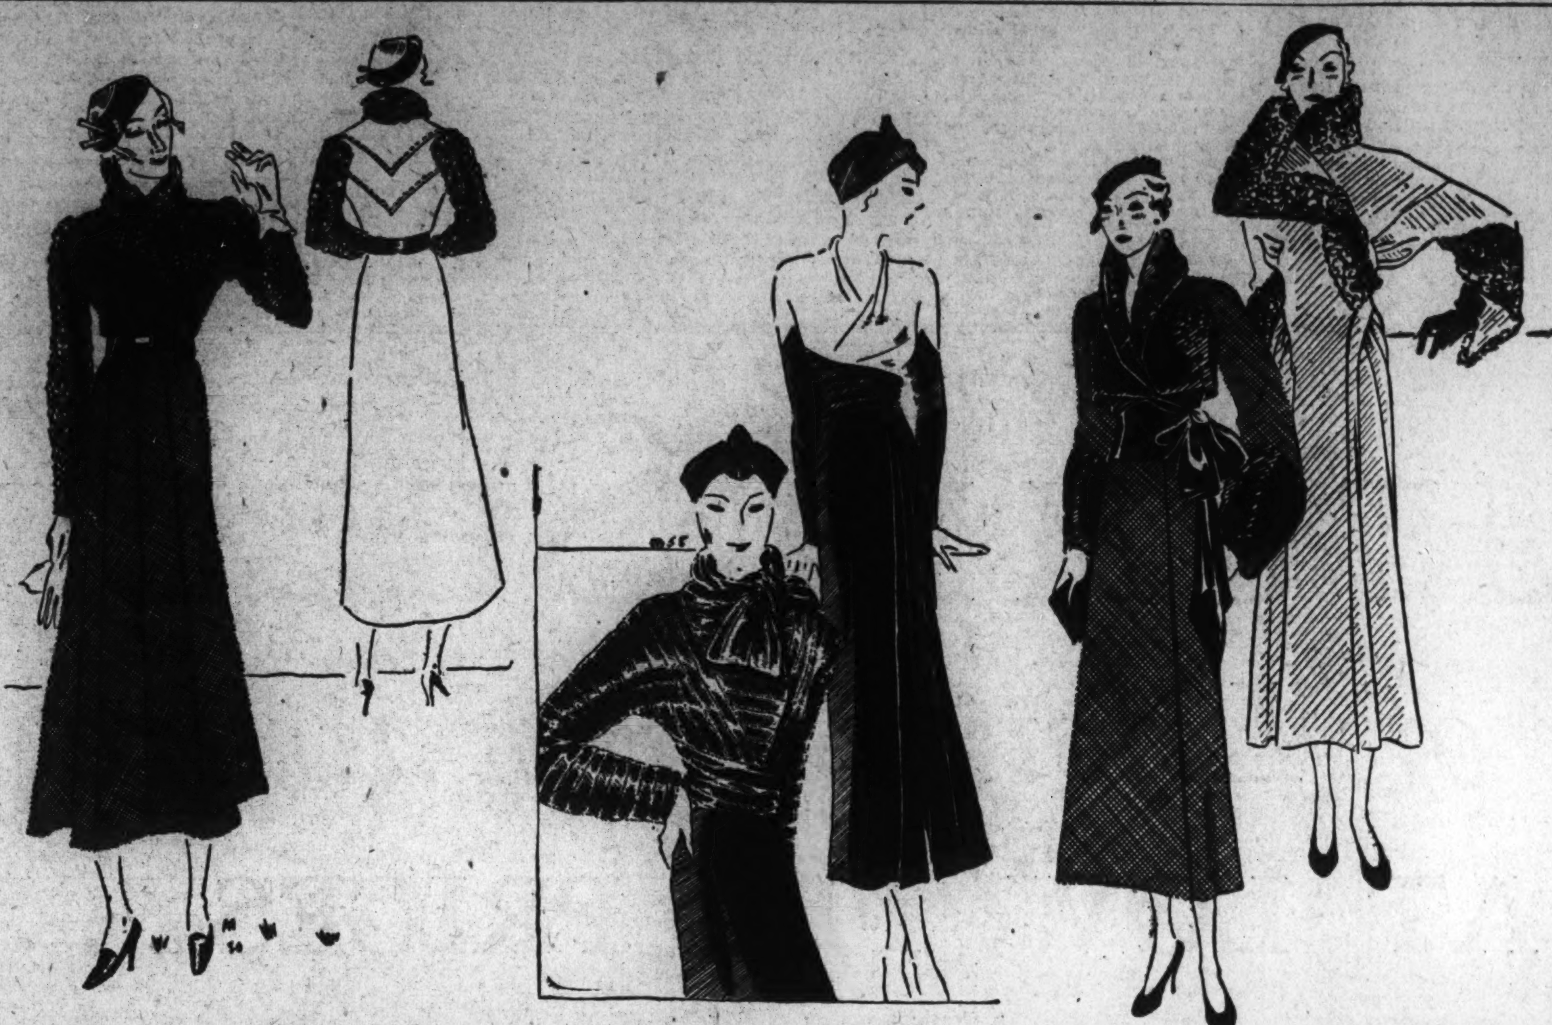
Champagne Color Used on Sailor Hat

The satin sailor—brief as to brim, shallow as to crown—is a piquant silhouette, fitting well with the present-day costumes. Exclusive milliners make it in champagne color to wear with black or brown.

In white it offers a new theme for the bridesmaid, for Reboux does it this way with the brim turned up at back, and a tiny muff to match.

Flower Treatments

"Degrade" flower garlands to be posed diagonally from shoulder to waistline front or back (graduated either in color or in size, or both) . . . the "shoulder strap" garlands which turn a narrow-shouldered evening gown into a "crested" or "wide shouldered" one . . . the half wreath, which serves to outline U or round necklines on black tailored frocks. . . the brown—leather or velvet—cluster boutonniere, all are new flower treatments.



"A Day in Autumn" is the appropriate name of this coat of brown woolen trimmed with matching astrakhan and belted with brown leather, at left. The fur sleeves, giving a bit of width to the silhouette, and the wrap-over movement well to the side, are fashionable points of the new collection.

"Parisienne" is the dress which goes with Bruyere's new fashion of a short jacket of brown ermine, and a cloth skirt, both of which come off to show this dress deneath, of beige and brown flamisol, which illustrates the bold color combinations approved in the new collection. Model from Lucile Paray, in center.

A coat from Maggy Rouff is shown at the right. The dropped yoke, bloused waistline in back and gathered fullness in the skirt are interesting details.

Beige Slated To Be Leading Spring Color

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Whether winter comes or not, spring is already in the minds of fashion analysts and color experts. Beige, for instance, has already been decided upon as one of the leading colors for the 1933 spring season.

The Textile Color Card Association has selected two shades of beige to be promoted by leather and shoe industries for spring and summer. One is a strong shade and the other is a natural tone. Both complement the new pastel shades as well as the light beige costumes which are expected to be popular in the spring.

The other staple colors recommended are a dark shade called Indies brown, to key with the new costume browns; town greens and reds; a "swagger brown" for sports and walking shows to complement the navy, Oxford gray and rust shades of fabrics; "admirably blue," to be worn with the increasingly popular navy and wide range of softer blues, as well as the new spring grays; black, especially favored as an accent with the new beiges, grays and "washed-out tones," and white.

The swagger type of coat is gaining importance in the evening wrap line. Many coats of black Lyons velvet are shown in this loose, seven-eighths length model, because of its adaptability for less formal occasions such as restaurant dining and the theater.

Generally the wrap is lined with white satin and simply designed with long, moderately puffed sleeves and a tied or tailored neck line. In many cases it is interlined to give warmth.

Lace sleeves reaching from the wrist to the elbow and ending at the elbow in a flared cuff, and lace jabots on daytime frocks are Victorian notes in some of the new costumes.

Fashion Offering Varied Velveteen

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Velveteen suits are new this season. They come in plain or ribbed weaves and in both bright and dark colors. Most of them are designed with hipbone or hip-length jackets.

One of the smartest models is of mahogany brown velvet trimmed with bands of brown astrakhan. It is worn with a brown astrakhan bonnet and muff. Another suit of apple green ribbed velveteen has a plain jacket finished with a leather belt studden in varicolored stones.

Lace Adorning Evening Frocks

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Lace has staged a come-back for evening wear this winter.

This year's version, which is generally heavy instead of fine, is displayed in a variety of fashions. There are red laces treated with a waxed finish which gives them a glaze, heavy white laces filmed with gold threads and varicolored laces embroidered in brilliants.

New Dinner Suit Is Made of Lame

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Gold lame dinner suits designed like a man's dinner jacket are the newest trick in evening togs.

A slim, straight, sleeveless frock having a skirt about 10 inches from the floor is worn with a tailored hip-length jacket. Both are made of soft uncrushable lame.

Rim Upon Brim

The Spanish bolero hat is another feature of Agnes' collection, offering another variation of the straight-brimmed sailor, namely, with the rim on the edge of the brim.

By ELEANOR GUNN.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—A list of what women are now wearing might very easily mislead one into thinking it was a list for mothers who were about to do some shopping for their young. First we encounter bibs. Next we encounter guimps, then jumpers or suspender dresses, and I am sure we might find many other items that have a distinctly schoolroom suggestion—as, for instance, plaids.

When we were very young we wore plaids and thought that ended the matter. Not so. Grown-ups have gone suddenly as plaid as anything can be, and grown-ups have stolen many other childish things, such as those already mentioned, to say nothing of sashes and ringlets! The curious part of it all is that it does not seem to be a part of any scheme to look particularly young. Not because of, but in spite of, all these things, clothes are sophisticated in the extreme. They have a very sensible aspect, too, thanks to any number of convertible details, as advoidance of absurdities and a general tendency to be as good as money can buy. Women seem to be past the stage where they know that fewer and better clothes are the answer to modern clothes and budget problems.

There is plenty of color being worn, but more black than one might have expected, plenty of fur, but so arranged that it is separate from the garment—which is a help to the woman who cannot afford fur. She simply looks as though it was not her day for wearing her fur accessories with her good looking coat or suit as the case may be.

The swagger coat seems to be claiming recognition on its silhouette merits and entirely independent of any sports idea. Swagger coats may be of formal fabrics and worn to the swankiest affairs. Women seem relieved at the idea of wearing coats that make no pretense of covering the gown beneath It sometimes seems as though one cuts off a year for every inch And that's enough to endear the ten inches from the hem sort of coat now, isn't it?

Coiffures are a help, too, especially those with ringlets and curls, but most hats are sophisticated enough to offset a too infantile effect.

Fifth Avenue Now Staging Fashion Show

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Fifth avenue is no less elegant today as a shopping center than it was 25 years ago as an exclusive residential thoroughfare.

Huge silver birthday cakes, old engravings and costumes designed for the fashionable women of those days are featured in windows of many smart new shops whose fashions today lure women from all over the country to the avenue.

Such luxury of the costuming has not been seen in several years as is viewed in the windows along this famous street this season.

Rich velvets, expensive furs—silver fox, sable and ermine—glamorous evening gowns of metal cloth, brocades, clinging laces and modern weaves glittering with sequin, strass and rhinestone trimmings; street and afternoon costumes of broadcloth and velvet, and all the trappings that add magnificence to the fashion picture, are seen there in the new displays.

The costumes designed for the women who come to the avenue for their 1932 clothes are no less romantic in style than those worn by the belles of 25 years ago as they fluttered into the homes of the society folk who dwelt there.

Military Waistcoats Top Frocks at Paris

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Military waistcoats are one designer's outstanding contribution to winter chic. They are brief sleeveless boleros having shoulder lines accentec by fringed epaulettes.

Purple and Violet Favored for Evening

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Cardinal purple and violet are among the favorite colors for evening wear. Winter collections in almost every house show at least one purple evening gown, dinner frock or wrap.

One of smartest is a purple velvet dinner gown designed with a drop shoulder line and elbow length puffed sleeves. The skirt sweeps into full lines below the knees.

Bustline Accented

One of the most important phases of the evening silhouette is still the accenting of bustline contour, and is achieved with new effect in the various ways in which fullness is introduced at top, as well as by the high slenderness of the girdle section.

Refreshing Style Note

Metal and wool laces for evening strike a refreshing note, gold and green being especially attractive.

Plaid Costumes Are Popular for Autumn

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—No fall wardrobe seems complete without a dashing plaid costume or accessory as jaunty as a Scotch kiltie. Plaid skirts worn with dark woolen tuck-in blouses and high-necked sweaters are liked for sports and campus wear. Blouses of plaid silk, velvet or cotton are seen with dark jumper dresses and suits.

Wraparound Gown Found Economical

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Wraparound evening gowns, designed for the woman who has no maid, are Lyolene's winter offering to economical styles.

They may be adjusted by slipping the arms through the shoulder straps and fastening the frock at the waistline on one side, and hence offer no danger of tousling carefully adjusted coiffures. They are also easy to press, since they may be laid flat on an ironing board.

Football Inspires Sports Costumes

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Turtle-necked sweater blouses, in designs borrowed from the football uniform, are being used as accessories for the modern girl's sports costume.

A turtle-necked blouse of bright red jersey is worn with a sports suit of brown and beige flecked wool. The full three-quater length coat is lined in the same red jersey.

Crochet Employed For Winter Frocks

One demure black wool model has a high neck finished with a little tie edged in white crochet. Another of black angora wool has a yoke made of two overlapping white crocheted scarfs.

Sleeves Are Simple

Countless numbers of sleeves are simple and fitted, with merely a concession of width to the minimum of fulness.

If there is actual fullness it is controlled by sewed down pleats that once again assure us that the shoulder must be kept in a clear profile; otherwise width is interpreted in cap effects. Sleeves are elaborated, but not exaggerated.

Cuffs on Toques

Persian toques, with three-inch cuffs, and feather ornaments in front, are prominent in Agnes' new collection.

Shoe Laces Used Instead Of Buttons

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Lots of successes are made by "starting on a shoe string." The idea is going over big from a fashion point of view, at least.

Schiaparelli, who is always doing the most amazing things with dress fastenings, has done away with buttons completely, and a number of the designer's newest creations are simply tied on with shoe laces.

One wool costume has a smart bronze plaque with holes in it, so that shoe laces can be run through. The laces are tipped with bronze and provide a clever decorative motif.

Bows and buckles of Edwardian influence trim the newest pumps. Some are of new compositions cut in bow shapes; others are bows made of ribbon. The buckles are of cut steel and other metals.

There is quite a vogue for black jewelry with the revival of formal black afternoon clothes. The all-black costume—black hats, coats, shoes, bags and jewelry—is appearing everywhere and is considered extremely chic. Onyx rings, bracelets and pins are favorites. Many of them are combined with diamonds. Usually the stone is plain and uncarved and set in yellow gold or silver.

Everyone is getting a presto-change costume for herself this season. They are serving their wearers well, too. The dress is a low cut, often sleeveless, evening gaown, accompanied by a jacket to give it an informal appearance. One way of achieving this informality is by attaching a pair of contrasting sleeves to the shoulders, and removing them for more formal wear.

Waterproof Coats Made Reversible

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Waterproof coats which turn inside out are one designer's outstanding contribution to economy this winter.

In her collection she shows simple semifitted coats which are waterproofed crinkled crepe on one side and wool of a contrasting color on the other. They may be worn with the side out which suits the weather.

Smart Winter Suit Like Monks' Habit

It is made of plain brown wool and designed with a voluminous collar which can be muffled up about the chin when the wearer wishes. Both skirt and jacket follow plain straight lines.

Hatback Is Need

The strong popularity of the Victorian coiffure that sweeps all the curls to the back of the head makes the elevated hatback practically imperative.

Newest French Sport Frocks Locked by Key

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Fashion has joined hands with love to laugh at locksmiths. But the locksmith may have the last laugh, at that, if the luckless lady in the newest French sports frock has lost the key with which the dress is fastened.

Varied and clever have been the fastenings on the autumn costumes, but the machine key fastener is perhaps the most unique and amusing. Buttons of all descriptions are used for trimming on many frocks, but their prime use as fasteners is not so important these days, when tying, pinning and slipping the clothes on is the vogue.

Huge horse-blanket safety pins of metal and other compositions, immense brooches and bar pins are favored especially for sports wear, while many day and evening dresses of softer, more supple fabrics are tied at the shoulders and waist.

Sleeveless jackets, waistcoats and corselets are laced in many instances. Jackets of chamois or suede and often of felt are frequently laced with metal-tipped leather ties strung through metal eyelets.

Tailored Satin Pajamas Worn

Tailored satin pajamas are the things to be wearing when the house burns so as how you won't feel like quite such a silly orchid as you flee by the volunteer department.

There's nothing like a good attempt at an exit in the middle of the night from a burning building in a bit of a gown mostly chiffon and lace, from the firemen's viewpoint, but it's much smarter this season to breeze out in severely tailored satin pajamas with nothing but a ravishing monogram in contrast color for the ornamentation.

Vertical Gathers Simple Technique

Vertical gathers just under the bust caught into the straight high belt inset is a simple technique, and the gathered effect around the decolletage attributed to Vionnet is an interesting method.

While the various uses of shirrings this season are not at all concerned with bodices, they frequently are employed in divisional and uplift movement for defining bustline contour.

Countess Chooses Blue for Autumn

Among her costumes is one designed with a skirt of beige and brown tweed and a blouse of pastel blue jersey tying in a lose bow under the chin. The jacket which accompanies it is of russet brown tweed fastened by laces slipped through a gold plaque.

Leather Belts Worn With New Fur Coats

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Leather belts appear on many of the new fur coats this season. Some of them blend with the color of the coat, while others offer a brilliant contrast.

Coats Are Bloused

An instance of where extremes meet in fashion is to be observed on the style horizon and it is indicated in the latest introduction of a definite blousing in the models of certain French coats and dresses. It is to be seen only to a very limited degree as yet, another tryout fashion, but it registers.

Flowers Lend Colors To Styles This Season

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Hyacinths, zinnias and roses are lending their lush colors to the style color scope this season, with the lovely violet and purplish tones especially popular.

Varied Design Features Style Seen in Paris

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Winter styles for 1932 are more varied in design than they have been for the last decade.

"Choose what suits you best," is the rule by which smart Parisians are selecting their wardrobes, for silhouettes, waistlines and sleeves are as varied as the houses which evolve them. Slenderness is the one principle which they have in common.

Skirts are generally a few inches longer, varying from 7 to 10 inches from the floor for daytime wear, although one of the best houses has shattered this rule by showing street skirts a good 12 inches from the ground. In cut they vary from slender sheath-like designs to models with gentle pleated or gored fullness in front.

The favorite with buyers and chic Parisians to date is a natural or medium high line. Sleeves vary from a modified muttonleg design to plain models devoid of extraneous detail or accented only at the elbows.

Colors are as diversified as lines. Reds are outstanding in the color chart, with wine, brick, tangerine, geraniums and a new shade called "cabbage" all presented in the mode.

Then come browns (copper, chestnut, chocolate, mahogany, henna and medieval); grays (pumice, caviar, mist and smoke), blues (hyacinth, pastel and Chinese blue-green), greens (olive and emerald) and a liberal sprinkling of purple, magenta and fuchsia.

Fabrics are equally varied. The plain wools so much in vogue last year have given way to shepherds checks, stripes, multi-colored tapestry jerseys, angora wools and wools with gold paillettes embedded in the weave.

Velveteens and crinkled, striped, ribbed and frosse velvets are widely used for both formal and afternoon and evening wear, while sharkskin satins, dull marocains and pebbled and crinkled crepes are also seen.

Daytime coats generally preserve a slender semifitted silhouette with fur trimming chiefly concentrated above the waistline. Entire bodices, sleeves and pockets of flat pelts and swirling collars of fluffy furs are both widely used.

Coats generally match frocks or reflect a darker shade, although some houses prefer a contrast in color with the trimming of the frock recalling the color of the coat. Muffs are seen everywhere.

Capes furnish one of the most interesting new items of winter collections and promise to enjoy a definite vogue. They are shown in knee-length fur and cloth models and shoulder length fur designs for daytime wear and in long draped designs for evening wear.

Daytime frocks vary from simple wools with hip tunic blouses to the newer and more elaborate designs for afternoon wear in velvet or crepe. Their silhouettes are universally slender. Braided trims, hug-me-tight scarfs of crinkled wool, leather dog-leash collars, jewel-studded sports belts and large wooden buttons are all used as trimming effects.

Fall Sports Outfits Have Leather Trims

Paris, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Leather trims accent the new fall sports mode. Vests, revers and belts all are made of smoothly finished hides.

One smart golf costume of brown and beige tweed has a little vest-blouse of brown leather and a jacket finished with two wide leather revers.

Long Necklace Worn With Rose Apparel

Hat Posed Straight, Big Paris Question

Up to the present, the forward-posed, side-tilted angle has prevailed in fall hats there, just as they have here, despite the word that the "straight line" is newer and smarter.

Latest Color Styles

Raspberry red and Patou's moyenage brown are listed as colors in demand; also raisin tones and chocolate brown.

Fringe on Armholes

Fringe is another favored trimming, used to border armholes and suggest sleeves, and also as a border for capes, the latter attributed to Mainbocher.

New Bodices Are Attractive For All Ages

Mrs. Hoover Is Effective in Gown of Black Chiffon in Modish Lines.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

THE new freedom of women is not expressed in the skirts for evening wear of the women of fashion of 1932, for the sheath skirt is with us once more. This type of skirt, which fits as tightly as possible from the waistline down to the ankles, makes for mincing steps instead of the swinging stride which naturally characterizes the achieving woman of today.

At the present hour the majority of the sheath-skirted evening gowns have some width at the ankles, the close fittting effect being emphasized only to the knees. But there is no denying that the ultra smart type of evening dress skirt hugs the figure from waist to ankles and that this type of garment will be adopted by many women before the winter is over. Those that have been seen so far are slashed up one side.

But if there is something to worry about over the fashionable skirts of the hour and those of the next hour, there is compensation in the softly becoming lines of the new bodices, which give women and girls of all ages a softly feminine attraction and a chance to display rounded shoulders or to cover up those that are too thin.

Nothing, perhaps, adds to the becomingness of the evening frock of the present hour as do the shoulder arrangements. The too plump arm loses much of its plumpness when it is softly modified by very short armhole ruffles or puff sleeves which make the arm look thinner in comparison. The long "angel sleeves" which form part of the still fashionable classic evening gowns also are kindly alike to plump and thin arms.

Age of Ruffles.

This is an age of ruffles and those who want to break the too-sheathed lines of their gowns often employ them at the armholes and at the knee. This is a revival of the styles of the turn of the century when the Gibson girl stepped out to dance with as many as 40 or 50 ruffles bedecking her ball gown.

The younger set has eagerly seized on the intriguing jeune fille dresses of taffeta with short puffed organdie sleeves and guimpes. Of course to add to the effect the collars of the guimpes are high or rounded out in real little girl fashion about the throat.

It is not surprising that with the general trend of the evening dress styles toward the 1900s, feather boas and plaited chiffon scarfs should be in vogue.

A debutante has a dress of heavy knobby finished flesh beige silk, made on sheathed lines, with which she wears a boa of curled marabou that comes down to her ankles. This marabou scarf is in a soft shade of pink and is studded with tiny clusters of forget-me-nots.

Effective Evening Hoover Gown.

Mrs. Hoover has an effective evening gown of black chiffon and lace made on modish graceful lines. Mrs. Hoover is also wearing a handsome black suit with gray fur collar and cuffs and a smart fall hat.

Mrs. William De Witt Mitchell wore at a dinner party last week a dress of black lace with scarf sleeves and a long skirt.

Miss Anne Elizabeth Wood wore for a stroll on Connecticut avenue one day last week a swagger suit of brown and tan tweed, with a collor of brown fur. With this she wore a very small brown felt hat.

Mrs. William H. King, wife of the senator from Utah, is wearing a dress of flesh-colored rough silk, bordered in rhinestone embroidery. With this she wears a white fur scarf.

Mrs. Henry Suydam has a fall costume composed of brown and beige sport dress, with which she wears a brown coat with a brown fur collar. Her hat is a soft brown felt with a narrow brim.

Worn by Miss Totten.

Miss Anne Totten is wearing a wool dress of herringbone weave made on strictly tailored lines, with full sleeves held in at the wrists by a narrow band. With this she wears a hat of dark felt, with small feather at one side, and a coat of dark wool.

Miss Jean Andrews, daughter of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Frank M. Andrews, is wearing a dinner dress of white silk in a rough weave. This is made with a long skirt sheathed to the knees and fuller at the ankles. It has a shoulder cape of the material edged with white marabou.

Miss Frances Waggaman, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Ennals Waggaman, is wearing a dress of black velvet, made on closely sheathed lines, and with a "vee" neckline held over the shoulders by narrow black velvet straps.

Miss Polly Foote has a becoming evening dress of the new flesh beige lace, made with a draped neckline and long closely-fitted skirt.

Mrs. Henry T. Allen was seen recently in a daytime dress of blue silk, with a white figure in it, made in coat effect. With this she wore a white silk blouse and a blue felt hat, with a blue and white tiny quill at one side of the crown.

Mrs. Donald Robinson is wearing a dress of blue chiffon, with a motif of white in it. This is made with a round neckline and short sleeves.

Mrs. George W. Marvin, wife of Lieut. Marvin, U. S. A., had on at a recent afternoon party a dress of chiffon with a yoke and cape sleeves of lace. With this she wore a small velvet hat and a beige fur scarf.

Mrs. Baron K. Yount, wife of the newly appointed commandant at Bolling Field, has an evening dress of black chiffon with a draped neckline and cape sleeves. With this she wears a large white fur boa.

Japanese Beetles Cause Less Damage in 1932

Harrisburg, Pa. (U.P.).—Japanese beetles caused less damage this summer in Pennsylvania than in former years since the infestation of the eastern section of the State by the summer pests, John W. Keller, State forestry department, reported.

Keller said the lateness of the beetles in arriving and the use of poisonous sprays were effective in keeping down their numbers.

Poplar, white birch, basswood, sassafras, cherry, elm, willow and horse chestnut trees were the principal sufferers, and these were affected mostly when they grew in open spaces, Keller said.

Old Man and Cats Now Only Occupants of Fort Sumter

Charleston, S. C., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—An old man with nothing much to do but raise and lower the flag and feed his cats is holding the fort that fired the shot that split the Union.

He is the Government caretaker and the sole occupant of Fort Sumter, the first target of Confederate guns fired in defiance of the mandate against secession.

The weight of environment that gave birth to stirring history rests lightly upon his shoulders. He sits and calmly smokes his pipe on red brick ramparts which sheltered Federal and Confederate garrisons alternately in bloody days that saw a new nation born. Beside him are gunports seized by the South Carolinians April 14, 1861, and make to belch forth screaming shells that inspired eleven States to create the Southern republic.

But that is history and the gunports are empty. The old man peeps through them toward the Charleston skyline and wonders when the Government boat will come out with his mail.

And there is the flagpole. First it bore aloft the Stars and Stripes. Then the Southerners tore down that flag, hoisted the Stars and Bars and fought on, wondering whence and when would come their next meal.

The Stars and Stripes is flying again, a pretty symbol of unity after the storm of human passions. Beneath its waving folds the old man spreads a banquet for his cats, and they gorge themselves at the base of the flagstaff the Confederates went hungry to defend.

Hard by is the ship channel. There was a time little monitors of the Federal Navy plowed through it to rake the fort and be raked in turn by Sumter's cannon.

Their offspring, growing up to be giants, ply the same channel today en route from the sea to Charleston Navy Yard and out to the sea again. The old stronghold that roared so terribly at the monitors witnesses the passing of the giants in deep silence, and there is no sign of life therein save the old man's friendly waving.

THOUSANDS ADMIRE RECREATION ROOM

Boss & Phelps, being up-to-the-minute builders, have not neglected to furnish their latest group home offerings on the east side of the 5700 block of Third place northwest with the popular recreation rooms. Typical of these, the recreation room of The Washington Post model home at 5727 Third place northwest, one of the group, has won the admiration of thousands since its opening for public inspection.

This home, furnished by Hutchison's, Inc., with draperies by the Shade Factory, is open daily until 9:30 o'clock in the evening.

Located in the basement, the recreation rooms are cool in summer, warm in winter and wonderful pastime rooms for use of family and guests. The floors of these rooms are on nonburning asphalt tile. There are brick fireplaces in these rooms, and their windows provide a flood of sunshine and air. A wide stairway affords easy access to this room from the first floor. This room is one of the most sensible features of the modern planning, an excellent utilization of former waste space.

The recreation room is especially attractively furnished with red and green card tables and folding chairs; a three-piece early American settee and chairs in solid maple wood, with a homespun fabric upholstering, and some very new metal rockers upholstered in black and red fabricoid.

Of a decided charm are the bedrooms of this model structure. They fill every requirement relative to convenience, light and ventilation.

The master bedroom is all in the early American period of curly maple, with twin beds equipped with custom-built "Hutchison's innerspring" mattress in a beautiful green Copley cloth. There is a Salem chest with a Chippendale mirror over it, also a vanity dressing table with a bench. The boudoir chair is upholstered in a glazed chintz on maple in a green color. The rugs in this room are throw sizes of a new frieze chenille in a pastel shade, also in green. A little "hobnail" lamp is sitting on a maple night table.

The guest bedroom is in walnut, consisting of a double bed fully equipped with coil spring and felt mattress, a vanity dressing table and bench, a chest of drawers and a bedside table. The boudoir chair is a lovely glazed chintz in yellow shades with a tiny spray of flowers in the chintz. The lamps are all matched with some oval scatter rugs, also in yellow shades.

The third bedroom is in the colonial mahogany with a single-poster bed; a lowboy in the same mahogany with a Chippendale mirror hanging over it. The boudoir chair is a mahogany armchair. There are a stool to match for the lowboy and oval colonial rugs with green borders.

New Realtor Work Will Be Discussed

Executives of Real Estate Board Will Meet in Chicago.

Important new work in which real estate boards are now entering will be discussed by executive officers of the real estate boards of the country at a meeting to be held in the Stevens Hotel, Chicago, November 3 and 4.

The meeting is the annual fall conference of the realtor secretaries' division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Seven questions will be before it—with more to come, since the two-day discussion will be entirely informal.

Subjects already scheduled, as announced by Clarence C. Lang, executive secretary of the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange, chairman of the division, are:

(1) Do present and probable future conditions require changes in the organization structure of local real estate boards? (2) Better financing plans for local real estate boards. (3) The operation of regional home land banks. (4) Status and activities of local property owner divisions. (5) Objectives and activities in the fight for tax relief. (6) Local housing conferences. (7) What service can real estate boards give on mortgage adjustments?

VIRGINIA REALTORS TO MEET THURSDAY

Chester Leasure, well-known writer on economic questions and trends in modern business, will address the twelfth annual convention of the Virginia Real Estate Association, which will convene Thursday, Friday and Saturday in Alexandria.

Mr. Leasure is now manager of the resolutions and referenda department, United States Chamber of Commerce. Realtors generally will recall with pleasure Mr. Leasure's interesting address given at the Roanoke convention of the association several years ago. His subject this year will be, "Shall We Help Drive or Just Be Driven?"

Keen interest is being manifested through the State in the convention, and it is confidently expected that more than 300 realtors and their ladies will be on hand for the opening.

Mississippi Sales Tax.

A recommendation that the State organization go on record as favoring a sales tax will be presented by the Norfolk Real Estate Board. The action of the Norfolk unit is based upon the success which Mississippi is having with its recently adopted 2 per cent general sales tax.

An appraisal contest will be an innovation at the gathering. Sets of plans and specifications have been furnished the association by Sears-Roebuck Co. and have been distributed throughout the State. A number of realtors have signified their intention of entering the contest, which will be judged more upon the technic of the appraiser, rather than the actual dollars and cents conclusion.

Home Town Contest.

Indications are that all the larger Virginia cities will have speakers in the "home town contest" in which realtors are allowed five minutes to "sell" their representative communities to the visiting delegates. This will be one of the features of the usual complimentary banquet, and will be followed by dancing.

A special committee is taking care of the entertainment for visiting ladies. It is customary for a large number of ladies to attend the State convention and nothing is being left undone to assure a good time for all the fair sex. Indications at present are that a large number of realtors will attend.

How Public Can Help Fight on Unemployment

The public can aid in the fight against unemployment. It can stimulate the sale of building materials. Owners and renters can take inventory of necessary or helpful repairs to their property that will provide work and sales. Below are a few suggestions.

Painting and papering—Paint all exposed wood, metal and iron work to prevent decay. Do not paint over decay or defects. It is a waste of money, costing more in the end for repairs and repainting. The inside of the house and cellar should be brightened and cleaned with paint and the walls and ceiling painted or papered.

Heating—The entire heating plant should be cleaned thoroughly of soot, including the smoke flue. The boiler and entire system drained of stale water and filled with fresh water. Radiator and air valves should be replaced if defective. Loss of heat from boiler and pipes may be overcome by covering with asbestos. All metal parts should be painted to prevent rust.

Caulking and weather-stripping—This prevents loss of heat, saves fuel and prevents cold air along floors, affecting children playing there. It should be applied to all doors and windows.

Generally—In giving proper attention to your property you are protecting against decay, expensive repairs and depreciation. Bear in mind also that every dollar you put into circulation has a far-reaching effect on the welfare of others, helping to relieve distress and unemployment.

BRIDGE TOURNAMENT SET FOR WEDNESDAY

Capital Contestants to Play at 2400 Sixteenth Street That Night.

Washington's chances for trophy collecting in the forthcoming international contract tournament are well above par, if interest in the bridge classic is any indication, according to P. J. Kohlhammer, manager of 2400 Sixteenth street.

Contract enthusiasts here and all over the world will have 200 gold and silver trophies to shoot at as State, province and national prizes on Wednesday night.

Play will begin at 2400 Sixteenth street and in all the other places selected by National Bridge Association, Inc., throughout the contract playing world at exactly 8 p. m. Players will be given sealed hands, prepared in advance by such collossi of the bridge world as Culbertson, Jacoby, Work et al., and delivered by special messenger from New York on the afternoon of the big day.

The experts point out that the tournament will be a thoroughly sporting event, so conducted through the introduction of the "par system" as to assure an equal chance of victory to every contestant.

"Reservations already made," Mr. Kohlhammer said yesterday, "indicate that the National Capital is going to have some new trophies and the rush of players and observers both, has hardly started. We expect to be able, however, to care for all who desire to participate by adding to the bridge salon, if necessary, our entire dining room."

Laughing Man Put to Sleep.

El Paso, Tex. (U.P.).—Dr. P. R. Outlaw, city health officer, had to send Charles E. Waterhouse to the hospital and put him to sleep when he became afflicted with a "laughing sickness" that sent him into uncontrollable paroxysms of mirth.

THIRD SMALL-HOUSE CONTEST ANNOUNCED

Competition in Architectural Designs Will Aim for Better Homes.

Announcement is made of the third annual small-house architectural competition conducted by Better Homes in America, Inc., in cooperation with a committee on awards appointed by the president of the American Institute of Architects.

The purpose of the competition is to discover the best examples of small house architecture through awarding medals and honorable mentions to the architects whose designs of houses erected during the last five years attain the highest standards in the estimation of the awards committee.

Better Homes in America, of which Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior, is president, is an educational institution which has organized more than 9,000 local committees to stimulate home improvement through contests, lecture programs, exhibits and house demonstrations.

In promoting this annual competition, Better Homes in America, it was explained, is interested both in recognizing the architects who have contributed most to improvements in small house design and in acquainting the American public with the best examples of good small house architecture.

Majority Still Ugly.

"The great majority of small houses built in America are still ugly in design and inconveniently planned," declares James Ford, executive director of Better Homes in America. "The builders and buyers of small homes know little of architecture and fail to realize that architectural beauty and distinctiveness are qualities which are within their command. Their investment buys 'just another house' rather than a home that will be convenient and livable and a community asset."

The conditions governing the entries stipulate that the competition is to close December 1, 1932, according to E J. Russell, president of the American Institute of Architects. Awards of three gold medals are to be made to practicing architects for the best design submitted for each of three types of houses, a one-story house, in which storage space but no living accommodations may occur in roof space; a story-and-a-half house, with living accommodations partly in a second story which is actually a "half-story;" and a two-story house.

The awards are aimed to discover and call attention to the best small houses actually constructed during the given period, and thus to stimulate interest in overcoming the faulty design and construction of the really small house. To this end the actual cube of the house, above the level of the first floor, is not to be greater than 24,000 cubic feet except for two-story houses for which a cubage of 26,000 cubic feet is permitted. Open porches are to be estimated at one-half cube.

Photographs Are Invited.

The documents to be submitted include floor plans, blueprints or otherwise, showing the first floor, and second floor if it has living accommodations; two elevations, and one or two photographs of exterior, preferably two. Two photographs of the interior may be submitted if desired, but as the award is to be based upon the design of the structure, not on its furnishings, interior photographs, if submitted, should be selected with this in mind.

Houses entered in the 1932 competition are to be those the construction of which was finally completed between the years 1927 and 1931, inclusive. Designs of houses which have been submitted previously can not be resubmitted to the committee in 1932.

The awards will be announced about January 1, 1933. Exhibits, shipped to Better Homes in America, in care of the American Institute of Architects, 1741 New York avenue, Washington, D. C., must be received not later than December 1, 1932.

The jury is not required to make any or all of the awards should there be no houses submitted which in its opinion deserve a medal. In addition to the medals, however, the committee may also grant honorable mention to designs which are deemed worthy. In awarding honorable mention the jury will give special consideration to the suitability of the designs to the climatic conditions and local traditions of the geographical regions in which they were built.

BIRON STUDIO HOMES ARE IN GOOD DEMAND

Brisk Sale of Residences in Rock Creek Park Area Is Reported.

Biron Bros., well known building firm, are having great success with their studio homes at Fourtenth and Sheridan streets northwest. All but one in one group have been sold, and another row is under construction. A corner studio home, a feature of these attractive dwellings, is now open for inspection daily until 9 p. m.

These homes overlooking Rock Creek Park and Sixteenth street, are aptly termed "homes that are different." They contain eight large rooms, the fashionable step-down living room with beamed ceiling, ultra modern kitchen and dinette, two baths of colored tile, two open fireplaces, spacious recreation room and built-in garage with overhead door.

A keen interest has been taken in this development since its start, and the sales response has been commensurate with the quality of the product. The developers have years of successful accomplishment to their credit, and invariably present pleasing, well constructed and arranged residential offerings.

Before buying, it will be well worth the homeseeker's time to consider these homes. They can be reached by driving out Sixteenth street to Sheridan street northwest, then going one square east to the exhibit house of the group, furnished by the Nelson Furniture Co.

Alaskan Fishermen Unable to Make Living

Philadelphia (U.P.).—The Alaskan Indians are unable to make a living because of the prices paid by fish canneries, Matthew K. Sniffen, secretary of the Indian Rights Association, said after a four-month trip through the north country.

"In the old days, Indians used to make from $750 to $1,500 for six weeks of fishing. Now they are lucky if they get $150," he said.

HALF OF SITES SOLD AT WESTMORELAND

Simultaneous with the information that the street paving work is well under way comes the announcement that more than 50 per cent of the available home sites in the first section of Westmoreland Hills has been sold or reserved for plans, only three weeks after the property was advertised for the first time.

The Loughborough Development Corporation owns nearly 500 acres of high, rolling and heavily timbered residential land along Massachusetts avenue where it crosses into Maryland. The first section, now under development, consists of nearly 20 acres at the District line between the Dalecarlia Park and the new Massachusetts Circle.

The subdivision is in conformity with the published recommendations of the President's conference on home building and home ownership. The individual home sits have a minimum building restriction width of 70 feet. The topography of the land has been followed and the natural beauty fully preserved. The lots are covered with full grown trees and the laurel, dogwood and redbud are being carefully saved to aid in landscaping the finished homes.

Homes Plans Approved.

The lots sold represent transactions where plans for homes have been approved and construction prices agreed upon. Those reserved are ones selected by prospective purchasers to be held until plans for their homes have been sketched from their ideas and prices quoted thereon.

The object of the developers is to sell their first section and have nearly 50 homes erected immediately in order to establish a community and open up for development the rest of their large tract.

To stimulate sales they are offering their purchasers unusual values. They plan a home from the ideas of the

TAX SIMPLIFICATION IS ENVISIONED AHEAD

Realtors' Idea Is Indorsed by Mr. Hoover; Promised by Both Parties.

Assurance of an eventually bettered tax situation for real estate is found in the emphatic recognition of both major political parties of the importance of some sort of national action looking toward tax simplification, the National Association of Real Estate Boards points out.

The text follows of President Hoover's statement of October 4, announcing that immediately after the November elections he will call a national conference to review the whole tax system of the country, Federal, State and local, looking toward a bettered adjustment of tax levies:

"Last April I delivered an address to the conference of the governors of the various States. I stated in effect that the most inflexible tax in our country is the tax on land and on real property. It is the least adaptable to the varying income of the taxpayers. I stated in the present situation the taxes upon farms and homes have become almost unbearable, that such taxes are wholly out of proportion to other forms of taxes.

"I stated then emphatically that there is no farm relief more needed today than readjustment of land taxes.

"The Federal Government collects no direct property taxes, but at that meeting I proposed that we should review the whole relations of our tax system between Federal, State and local governments and seek a basis of taxation for each that would give opportunity for readjustments between our different forms of government.

"Such readjustments should be found which would enable the States to find other sources of tax revenue, and would more equitably distribute the burden over the whole people. I announced last April that I would call tax experts of the Nation together to determine methods we should pursue. I shall do so as soon as the national election is out of the way, and I shall then recommend methods to Congress."

Text of Franklin D. Roosevelt's statement of September 30 outlining in part his attitude toward the tax problem and tax simplification:

"Half of what is paid for the support of government in this country goes to local government — cities, townships, counties and other small units. The other half goes to the State and Nation. As a broad proposition you and I know we are not using our present agencies of local government with real economy and efficiency.

"We have too many taxing districts. The taxpayers literally groan under layer upon layer of tax units. Relief can come only through resolute, courageous cutting. In many States we must, through the Legislature and even through constitutional changes, reorganize our local government for the purpose of eliminating unnecessary positions and for the purpose of consolidating functions and concentrating responsibility in fewer hands.

"The cost of State government has increased twofold and even threefold in the last ten or fifteen years. In this field also I believe that substantial reductions can be made. * * * More than 30 per cent of your tax dollar goes to Washington. We need a simplification of what the Federal Government is giving to the people."

In a resolution adopted at its annual convention in Baltimore, May, 1931, the National Association of Real Estate Boards petitioned President Hoover to call a national tax conference to study present overlapping between the various taxing units and to make recommendations for a better coordination of the national' tax system.

purchaser, and will finance and build it for him on one of their sites at a price in which they have added to the actual cost to them only a fair profit on the land.

A prospective home owner who wishes to know what it would cost him to have a home built from his own plans may select an available site and have a sketch made and a price quoted without cost or obligation on his part.

The development is fully restricted as to social and architectural requirements, but there are no prohibitive price limitations to bar those otherwise eminently qualified to live in the best home environment.

BOOM IN NEW TYPE OF BUILDING IS SEEN

America is becoming "architecture conscious," declares William A. BorING, dean of the Columbia University School of Architecture, in his annual report to President Nicholas Murray Butler. A new popular interest in building design is springing up, and will bring about a reconstruction program more sweeping than any before known, even in "boom" times, he asserts.

"Modern architecture in its true sense," says Dean Boring, "is really the architecture of democracy. It is primarily motivated by the search for profitable building, and is quite the opposite from the ancient Greek ideal which has been the standard for so many generations. Beautiful buildings were created by the Greeks as symbols of a sacrifice to the gods, but in America buildings vibrate with the necessity to serve the people within them.

"Modern materials and methods of construction have been brought to high perfection and the planning of buildings for convenience and economy has become almost scientific in its approach. But neither good construction nor perfected planning in themselves produce beauty of design.

Recognition of Beauty.

"Beauty is an organizing force that must grow its roots down into the vital parts of the whole structure, and influence and idealize the more practical elements.

"A growing interest in and recognition of beauty in buildings is a hopeful sign for the future of American architecture. Strong artists will have to be trained for the coming days.

"The building business is a large part of our national industry, and increasing popular interest in architecture will eventually bring about dissatisfaction with the obsolete structures that line our city streets, and a reconstruction program vaster than any we have previously seen in speculative periods. Indeed, it is not unreasonable to expect that the new era of great production may have its energies turned from the motor car and devices for flying to the making of beautiful places where we can live in peace and safety.

Plenty of Talent.

"We have plenty of talent to train in the schools for this coming revival of beautiful building, in spite of the present dead aspect of the building industry. Columbia University has its share of this youthful army of architects, and we have noted an improvement in ability displayed. The younger generation on the whole apparently does not despair of the idealism latent in every human being that prefers beautiful things to mechanical even in buildings. Most of the pessimism today concerning the status of architecture in the United States seems to emanate from the elderly men in the profession or from the youth who can talk and write about architecture better than he can create it.

"Our school is filled to capacity with students, and most of them are gifted. We need constantly to give them better and better opportunities, and for that reason I appeal for one more professor who can teach the theory of architecture and also give design criticisms."

REALTY TAX RATES COMPILED ON SALES

Special to The Washington Post.

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 15.—The average realty tax rate for the cities of Richmond, Norfolk and Lynchburg on the basis of recorded sales of real estate is $2.73, it was announced last week by Otto Hollowell, secretary of the Virginia Real Estate Association. This compares with the estimated true tax rate of $1.71, as found by Dr. William H. Stauffer, State tax economist, for the year 1930, and recently released.

The realty association secretary used 25 actual sales of real estate in Norfolk and Richmond and ten in Lynchburg to arrive at his conclusion. Foreclosures, distressed property conveyances and family transactions were not used, and, in so far as it was possible to ascertain, the transfers reflected sales wherein the seller was not forced to sell nor the purchaser compelled to buy. The sales were all made during the past two months and the current tax rates of the cities used.

It was found, the statement continued, that assessments in Norfolk represented 130.04 per cent of the sales price; in Richmond, the assessment was 93.8 per cent of the sales price and in Lynchburg the ratio was 100 per cent, giving an adjusted tax rate of $3.64 for Norfolk, $2.19 for Richmond and $2.35 for Lynchburg.

"There has been either a drop in the value of real estate of 60 per cent since the State tax economist compiled his figures, or there was an error in his calculations," said Mr. Hollowell. "I do not believe that real estate has dropped in any such amount—if it has the citizens of the Commonwealth of Virginia are in a bad way, especially the widows and orphans who own bonds secured by real estate. If this condition is true, it has been brought about largely through ruinous rates of taxation."

The figures will be presented to the convention of the State Realty Association that convenes in Alexandria Thursday, as will a recommendation from the Norfolk Realty Board that the association indorse and work for a sales tax as a means of alleviating the realty tax burden.

"Sufficient time was not available to allow a more detailed study of the question," said Mr. Hallowell, "but in all probability the convention will authorize a detailed survey of conditions to be presented to the General Assembly's committee on taxation, authorized by resolution of the legislature."

LOAN BANK OFFICERS INCLUDE REALTORS

Two Former Presidents and Vice President Are Listed Among Chosen Officials.

Two former presidents of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and a former vice president are on the list of chief officers for the new Federal Home Loan Banks, for seven of which such officers have now been chosen. Harry Kissell, Springfield, Ohio, immediate past president of the association, member at present of its executive committee and chairman of its special home loan bank committee, has been made chairman of the board for the Cincinnati bank, Fifth District. Mr. Kissell, as announced previously, is one of the two directors for this bank named to represent the general public interest.

Henry G. Zander, Chicago, past president of the national association, a member of its executive committee and chairman of its committee on Federal legislation and taxation, has been named vice chairman of the board for the Evanston bank, Seventh District. Mr. Zander was named one of the two directors on the board to represent the general public interest.

Paul Stark, Madison, former vice president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, has been named to the directorate of the Evanston bank as one of the nine directors representing the home financing business for the district.

Grant H. Longnecker, executive secretary of the Benton Harbor-St. Joseph Real Estate Board, Michigan, has been named a member of the board of directors of the Indianapolis bank, Sixth District, as one of the nine directors representing the home financing business in the district.

Managers for the regional banks, it is announced, will be selected by their boards of directors in collaboration with the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. None of the three officers for each bank thus far announced will be salaried, but in each case the manager to be chosen will be paid.

"The chairman, being the presiding officer, presides over the meetings and has a considerable measure of policy control," Franklin W. Fort, chairman of the Federal board, states,

LIGHTING STRESSED IN BUILDING DESIGN

Yale Professor Declares It More Important Than Steel Construction.

Lighting is more important in building design than steel construction, acoustics or ventilation, Prof. Stanley R. McCandless, of Yale University, declared in a report to the Connecticut Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. Buildings can be lighted to give a charm and decorative quality never possible under daylight conditions, according to Prof. McCandless.

"There is very little excuse, from the standpoint of design, for the lighted turret, the bright steps at the setbacks, and above all the garish colors used in many examples of the modern skyscraper which we see at present," he said. "As far as possible the lighting should be directed to cover the building in its entirety or to include a particular structural aspect, and to carry out the architectural composition."

It is now recognized that light must be considered in the design of a building as carefully as the structural materials which give it its external appearance, he asserted.

"The new point of view toward lighting must be observed by the architect before the public will be able to benefit by the unused possibilities of lighting as they are available today," Prof. McCandless added. "Most exterior architecture is designed for its appearance under the uncontrolled distribution of the sun and daylight. Inasmuch as we do not have control over such sources, the design of light and shade is pretty well determined, but the use of artificial illumination at night will ordinarily give a building an entirely different aspect from that when seen during the day.

Location of Light Sources.

"The location of light sources and the type of distribution are part of the original design of a building, rather than something that can be applied or placed in an interior like furniture, which can be moved about after the building is completed. The most interesting aspect of modern lighting is the ability to control its distribution.

"It is essentially a plastic medium, and as such should be coordinated with the design of other plastic elements in the architectural form. The stock equipment available for distributing light in the proper manner is relatively limited, so that in order to incorporate it into the structural elements of the building considerable space and allowance should be made for it.

"Broadly speaking, taking a cue from nature, a combination of strong directional, localized lighting in conjunction with low general illumination will give a satisfactory visibility. The directional light will give high lights and shadows, thus delineating form. The general light will illuminate shadows and offset the contrasts of directional lighting.

Problem of Design.

"Lighting is primarily a problem of design, partly because it demands special treatment in the planning stage fully as much as structural steel. Like steel, it offers advantages over previous methods, but these advantages must be understood by the designer before light can be used satisfactorily to provide comfort and beauty naturally and without distortion in architecture.

"The abortive attempts to apply modern lighting in architecture are not so much the fault of the engineer as is the unfortunate practice of trying to apply lighting after the design, and often the building, are completed.

"Light must be provided by concealed or exposed sources and it travels in straight lines causing high lights and shadows unless it can be diffused by reflection from broad surfaces. Fundamentally, lighting is not a problem of fixtures.

"It is as plastic as stone and brick, but it has to emanate from some source which must either be built into the architecture or be exposed in the form of fixture. The technical limitations of lighting demand even more thought now than they may in the future.

"Architects are beginning to realize that they are facing a new factor which affects the design of the use of materials in buildings, even more than such recent developments as steel construction, air conditioning, acoustics and the like. This new factor is lighting."

Aztecs May Have Lived in United States

Columbia, Mo. (U.P.)—The Aztec Indians may have once roamed in the central part of the North American continent, two University of Missouri professors believe.

Dr. James B. Berry and Dr. Jesse, anthropologists, expressed that opinion after they discovered pieces of sculpturing near the Lake of the Ozarks at a point thought to be an old Indian camp.

They found a sculptured stone head at a natural portage. The stone was of a different variety than is found in that region.

The North American Indians, Dr. Berry said, were not so accomplished in primitive art as the Aztecs. Their sculpturing, he said, was limited to utilitarian objects.

Special Tax Urged For Jobless Relief

Backing up the contention of the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange, a committee of 600 citizens appointed by Mayor Miller, by unanimous vote has recommended that bonds for unemployment relief, if voted by the city of St. Louis, should be paid for by continuing special taxes and not by increasing the general property tax. A bond issue of $4,600,000 for relief purposes is to be voted upon at the general election on November 8.

If retired by adding its weight to the general property tax over a period of years it would be paid practically entirely by real estate. The action is the more remarkable because of the fact that the citizens' committee was appointed by the mayor to sponsor the passage of the proposed bond issue. The committee in the meantime has voted requesting the board of aldermen to convene in special session before the November election and reenact legislation continuing in force the special taxes for unemployment relief, which are effective at present only for one year. The committee makes the recommendation in order that payment of the interest and the principal of the proposed bond issue can be made from this source of revenue, instead of from increased taxes on real estate.

FEDERAL LOAN BANK HAILED BY BUILDERS

Special to The Washington Post.

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 15.—The opening of the twelve Federal Home Loan Banks is being hailed by the building and loan associations of the country as the culmination of a 13 years' fight for a nationally coordinated home financing system. Ward B. Whitlock, Springfield, Ill., president of the United States Building and Loan League, speaking in behalf of more than 3,000 associations, calls it the "final victory of financial wisdom over the hit and miss method of home mortgage financing in the past."

Immediate use of the Home Loan Bank funds is assured by the enthusiasm of the associations which will have access to this money, he says. Leaders in the league first threw their influence behind this type of legislation when it was proposed in the form of the Calder-Nolan bill in 1919.

Extent of the contribution made by the present officers of the league to immediate success of the system was revealed with the announcement that the building and loan associations represented by its president and two vice presidents have all purchased stock in their respective district banks, to the amount of $203,000.

Purchases $30,000 in Stock.

Mr. Whitlock, who is one of the directors of the Home Loan Bank opened at Evanston, Ill., is vice president of the Security Improvement & Loan Association, Springfield, which has purchased $30,000 of Home Loan Bank stock, equivalent to 1 per cent of its mortgage loans. Using the same percentage, which is required by the act, Philip Lieber, first vice president of the league, reports that his Shreveport Mutual Building Association, located in Shreveport, La., has subscribed for $93,000 of stock in the Little Rock, Ark., Home Loan Bank, and I. Friedlander, Houston, Tex., second vice president of the league, has subscribed for $80,000 of stock in the Little Rock bank in behalf of the Gibraltar Building & Savings Association. The bank to which an association subscribes is determined by the State in which it is located, since each bank serves a district of two or more States. Mr. Lieber and Mr. Friedlander are both directors of the Little Rock Home Loan Bank.

Reviewing the part played by the national building and loan organization in the enactment of the Home Loan Bank act, Mr. Whitlock cites the past year's history of the Luce-Reilly-Watson bill, as well as the Calder-Nolan bill of thirteen years ago, as follows:

"Our leaders have long felt that some other source of home financing funds besides the savings of individual investors, most of them of the few dollars a week type, was needed if building and loan associations were to meet the increasing need which the communities have for their services. Even in 1922, after we found that the Calder-Nolan bill providing for a central mortgage banking system could not arouse enough public enthusiasm at the time to be enacted, one of our farsighted leaders arose in the convention to say that 'Some time in the not distant future the broad, underlying, vital ideas of the Calder-Nolan bill will be enacted into law and written into our statute books.'

Various Bills Introduced.

"Several bills have been introduced since then in various sessions of various Congresses, proposing a similar measure. Then last year when economic depression had opened the eyes of the public to the need for a well-coordinated national system whereby building and loan associations and other financing agencies could at all times have access to sufficient flow of money to make long-time loans to home owners, the United States Building and Loan League decided upon a fight to the finish for the enactment of the law which was proposed by President Hoover November 13. The United States League board of directors passed such a resolution on December 2 last year.

"Our part in that campaign is best delineated in the words of Representative Michael K. Reilly, of Fond du Lac, Wis., whose name the bill bore in the House at the time of its passage. Mr. Reilly said at our annual convention this year: 'That we have the Federal Home Loan act as the law of our country is due largely to the efforts of the officers and members of the United States Building and Loan League. Morton Bodfish, your executive manager, was continually on the job, energetic, optimistic and informative. Mr. Best, your president; Mr. Cellarius, your secretary, and Mr. Friedlander were frequently in Washington to assist Mr. Bodfish in the work of converting Congress to the merits of the bill.' That is what the sponsor of the bill said of the services of the building and loan associations.

"In addition to this, there were 35 witnesses from building and loan associations who came to Washington to testify at hearings before Senate and House subcommittees in behalf of the bill. This testimony was necessary before the measure could even reach the floor for a vote. The banking and currency committees would not have reported it out without such conviction of its merit as these building and loan representatives did much to foster.

"The opening of the banks marks a new era of recognition for the building and loan associations of the country. There are 11,442 such associations, and they constitute a business which for 101 years has devoted its operations exclusively to the financing of homes. It is natural that the Federal Home Loan Bank act should name them first among its eligible member institutions. Indications are apparent on all sides that they will take member institutions."

Shelter--

What Does It Mean to You?

Is it a rambling roof overhead and windowless walls around; or does it picture a pretty home shining like silver in the summer sun with grassy, bordered gardens as a background for the happy, laughing children romping all out of breath with "Bing," the family dog?

And what will it envision for your child—a place where grouchy man and chiding wife scold at each other and the neighbor's quarrel comes screeching through the thinly plastered walls of some cheap flat or will it conjure up for him a man at ease reclining and his wife near by tending her window boxes filled with flowers within her happy home?

How can that little face remain beautiful unless the peace and beauty that impressions it and molds its very form are real things and not sought out by hungry eyes from fairy books because their absence makes a hunger there.

Be fair to him—your parents did not treat you so, but with full measure of self-sacrifice gave you the home that makes their memory your finest heritage.

Stocks Sent Slightly Higher In Dull, Half-Day Trading

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Stocks had a steady undertone today, finishing a little higher on balance, but trading was dull and the market failed to disclose much of a trend.

Net changes were largely fractional, as is frequently the case in a routine week-end session. Transactions amounted to 593,510 shares.

Rails tried to anticipate a favorable carloadings statement in the first half hour, but the actual statistics on freight movement for the week ended October 8 were somewhat under Wall street's expectations and traders took profits. Carriers steadied again with the general list later.

Losses averaging half a point by American Telephone, Case, Harvester, United Aircraft, American Tobacco B, American Can and Baltimore & Ohio were more than offset by moderate gains in Woolworth, North American, Westinghouse, New York Central, Allied Chemical, U. S. Steel preferred, Eastman and some of the metals and oils.

American Telephone's financial statement for the first nine months showed that subsidiaries had failed by $18,000,000 to cover dividends paid by them, most of which go to the parent company.

The rate of steel production is expected to show little change next week, for automobile companies and other large consumers are still not in the market on any substantial scale and the industry is depending on the small orders which have provided virtually all its lift so far this autumn. Government loans for construction work and railroad repair jobs have yet to be translated into sizable steel orders.

THE MARKETS AT A GLANCE

What the Stock Market Did

	Friday	Saturday
Advances	215	441
Declines	94	56
Unchanged	108	80
Total issues traded	417	577

Stocks.

Fractional advances of eight-tenths of a point were recorded in dull trading. The undertone remained steady, but trend indications were slight. Sales for the half session totaled 593,510 shares.

Bonds.

Stagnant trading resulted in an average gain of one-tenth of a point. The Canadian group attracted more attention. Sales dropped in volume to $4,969,000.

Curb.

Dealing slowed down and the market closed with fractional gains. Utility price changes were sharp. The half-day turnover dropped to 80,000 shares.

Wheat.

The collapse of speculative buying and stop-loss selling sent wheat down almost 1 cent. Unfavorable Canadian reports aided the decline. Nearly all of Friday's gains were lost. December wheat sold at 48¼ to 48⅜ cents per bushel.

Cotton.

An opening advance gave way to losses of 5 to 8 points in the general market. Southern selling and liquidation were blamed. December closed at 6.55. Liverpool reported some liquidation.

Gasoline Prices Increase.

Cleveland, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—An increase of one-half cent a gallon for all grades of gasoline, effective tomorrow, was announced today by the Standard Oil Co. of Ohio. All other major oil companies are expected to follow suit.

CURB SLOWS DOWN TO FRACTIONAL RISE

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Trading activity on the curb market today died down to a faint whisper, approximately 80,000 shares changing hands against 200,000 last Saturday. Prices were confined to narrow changes, for the most part a fraction upward.

Electric Bond & Share opened up nearly 2 points, but subsided later, closing with a gain of ⅝ point. American Gas & Electric gained nearly a point. Cities Service and Niagara Hudson Power were unchanged.

There was little activity in the utility preferred stocks, but price changes were sharp here and there. Electric Bond & Share 6 per cent preferred gained 6½ points. Appalachian Electric preferred dropped nearly 4 on an odd lot transaction.

The oil shares failed to register any further enthusiasm over recent advances in crude oil prices. Standard of Indiana gained a scant fraction. Imperial Oil was up a fraction. There were no dealings in Gulf or Humble.

In the specialty group, A. O. Smith gained 5 points. Singer held unchanged at par in an odd-lot sale. Aluminum Co. was up a point. Swift International gained a fraction.

Sales of Chain Stores Decrease 9.8 Per Cent

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—September sales of twenty-four leading chain store systems and mail order concerns aggregated $175,427,080 for September or the comparable four-week period. The volume compared with $194,542,047 for the like period of 1931. A decrease of 9.8 per cent.

This represents an improvement over results for several preceding months this year, when sales were off as much as 14 per cent.

U. S. TREASURY RECEIPTS.

Treasury receipts for October 13 were $2,314,649.62; expenditures $7,424,752.94; balance, $774,936,884.30. Customs duties for thirteen days of October were $10,036,151.19.

Investment Bankers to Plan Wide Attack on Depression

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—How best the power of the investment banking strength of the Nation may be thrown into the widespread effort now being made "to debrutalize the economic forces of the depression," will be a basic consideration at the investment bankers' convention next week, Robert E. Christie, jr., partner in Dillon, Read & Co., said in an interview.

"Investment bankers," he explained, "are aware of the criticism which has been directed against them. As is generally the case in all forms of economic activity, part of the criticism is justified, part of it unfair.

"Investment bankers are the issuers of practically all of the stocks and bonds sold in the United States. This means considerable financial influence and it means also a difficult job. Not one of the least difficult portions of that job is explaining to the public the complexities involved in borrowing money for others. Right now the reestablishment of the credit market is tremendously important, as witness governmental and semiofficial efforts to increase the flow of it.

"It is common knowledge that a vast amount of unnecessary loss and hardship is inflicted on many productive and essential businesses and individuals in periods of this kind, and the sound efforts of organized business and of government to prevent it is the most immediately interesting and practical thing in the process of business recovery.

"The Investment Bankers Association, is a fact-finding institution that maintains intimate contact with the Nation's major business and financial problems, and its reports this year, just as business stability seems approaching, should be of particular importance."

The convention will be held at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., October 22-26.

Canada to Assist Rail Employment

Dominion Will Advance $1,500,000 to Keep Men on Jobs.

Ottawa, Ontario, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The Dominion government, under the unemployment relief act, will advance nearly $1,500,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railways without interest, in order to keep 8,000 workers employed from the middle of November until December 31. Details of the plan were contained in an order-in-council presented today in the House of Commons.

The government took the action so that shop workers of the privately owned Canadian Pacific might not suffer any greater hardship during the Christmas season than those of the Canadian National, by which a large number of men is being kept at work, at least on part time.

The money will be advanced to the Canadian Pacific on the understanding it will be paid back, without interest, at such time as earnings of the railway permit resumption of dividends at the rate of 5 per cent.

Oil-Buying Groups Join Price Upturn

Advances of 9 to 12 Cents Per Barrel Will Be Paid Producer.

Tulsa, Okla., Oct. 15 (A.P.).—From virtually all crude oil purchasing companies the producer today was to receive 9 to 12 cents more a barrel for oil. The price advance, effective at 7 a. m., placed oil as high as $1.12. The former top price was $1 a barrel. Two major companies have not raised prices—the Standard Oil of Indiana and the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey. The Standard of Indiana in a statement yesterday said it would refuse to meet the increase because "conditions do not warrant even the present prices, and will not give necessary support to an increase."

The Standard of New Jersey has resisted the advance passively, but from subsidiaries of the firm—the Humble Oil & Refining Co. in Texas and the Carter Oil Co., Oklahoma and Kansas unit—statements were expected today. Companies which have raised prices include the mass of large and small independents and some of the major purchasing concerns. They contend an increase is justified because of the curtailment in production made by the State regulatory bodies of Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas.

BOND MARKET GAINS IN QUIETER DEALING

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Aside from renewed interest in Canadian securities, many of which advanced to new 1932 highs, the Bond Market was a rather stagnant affair today.

Sales totaled only $4,969,000, par value, considerably less than normal for a short Saturday session, and the average for 60 domestic corporate loans was up one-tenth of a point.

Of the Dominion group, seven National Railway and both the government 4s and 5s reached top figures for the year in only moderately active trading. Popularity of Canadian obligations was attributed partly to the recent tariff accord with Great Britain.

A few low-priced domestic railroad bonds added as much as a point or more to their gains of yesterday, although the turnover in this category was the smallest in several weeks.

The carrier liens that exhibited strength included some of Alleghany Corporation, Baltimore & Ohio, Chicago & Northwestern, Rock Island, Hudson & Manhattan, Missouri Pacific, New York Central, Nickel Plate, New Haven and Southern Pacific.

The utilities and industrials generally followed a narrow range, with their average holding barely steady. The heaviest trading was in International Match 5s which gained 1⅞ points. International Telephones were also rather active with gains of more than a point. Many others held to their previous positions.

Most United States Government loans were fractionally firmer. In the foreign section improvement was shown by some of the Germans, Italians, French and Norwegians.

Youngstown Steel Area Expects Yield Increase

Youngstown, Ohio, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—An improvement in steel production next week will raise mill operations in the Youngstown district above 20 per cent of capacity for the first time in many months. Finishing mill activity also will increase.

Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co.'s Bessemer plant, idle for two weeks, will resume during the week, giving the company's Campbell plant the highest steel tonnage output since last May. Open hearth furnaces at the Farrell (Pa.) plant of the Carnegie Steel Co. will work more turns, contributing to the gain in ingot production.

Miscellaneous freight loaded during the week of October 8 totaled 224,427 cars, an increase of 3,053 over the preceding week, but 64,222 under the corresponding week in 1931; merchandise less than car lot 179,641, decrease 158 cars below preceding week and 37,910 under same week last year; coal 132,947, increase 3,509 over preceding week, decrease 6,808 below same week last year.

COTTON PRICES DROP ON SOUTHERN SALES

December Closes at 6.55 as Market Sinks 5 to 8 Points in Trading.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—A slight opening advance in cotton was checked by Southern selling and realizing and prices eased off from 6.53 to 6.40 for December contracts. Closing quotations were the lowest for the day, with the market barely steady at net declines of 5 to 8 points.

Prices opened 3 to 6 points higher, then eased off on Southern selling and week-end realizing or liquidation. March contracts eased off from 6.66 to 6.55, closing at that figure.

The official forecasts for rains in the Eastern and Central belts were accompanied by reports of a tropical disturbance apparently central about 100 miles south of Port Arthur, moving northwestward, probably of moderate intensity.

Movement Delay Seen.

It was suggested that rains would probably delay the movement and might damage the grade of open cotton, but the weather news evidently failed to stimulate aggressive buying.

Southern selling here was in small lots, but persisted during the entire morning. In some quarters this was attributed to an increasing demand for October commitments, and no easing was reported in the basis. Houses with European connections were among the early buyers here, while there was a moderate demand from the domestic trade as well as more or less covering for over the week-end in view of the weather outlook.

Liverpool cables said that some liquidation in that market had been absorbed by trade calling together with continental and Bombay buying. The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance from U. S. ports at the end of the week was estimated at 165,000 bales, against 194,000 last year.

WHEAT VALUES SINK IN SELLING FLURRY

Chicago, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Collapse of speculative buying power led to a flurry of stop-loss selling in wheat and prices late today tumbled to below any bottom price record that December contracts had heretofore reached this season.

Rural marketing of wheat in Canada was again heavy, and advices at hand said the Winnipeg market was upheld solely by government support, big quantities of wheat being offered at a sixteenth of a cent over the government limit. Traders here who looked to the New York stock market for a new buying incentive switched to the selling of wheat when securities became easier after a steady opening.

Wheat closed nervous, ⅝ to 1 cent under yesterday's finish; corn, ⅛ to ⅜ down; oats, ⅛ to ¼ off, and provisions varying from 7 cents decline to 5 cents advance.

Selling Pressure Increases.

Selling pressure on wheat increased with every ⅛-cent break until the market had fallen 1½ cents. Then a fractional rally ensued, owing for the most part to demand from traders who earlier had sold and were in position to collect a profit. It was generally conceded that so far as prices themselves could be a factor, wheat bulls had an advantage, but that some striking new development, such as a notable reverse for southern hemisphere crop prospects, appeared necessary to stimulate widespread sustained buying.

Reports that 8,000,000 acres of domestic winter wheat were in serious need of rain failed to bring about price upturns of any consequence. On the contrary, a few showers in Kansas served to emphasize bearish sentiment. Another weight on the market was an estimate circulated that Canadian farmers had already delivered about 190,000,000 bushels of wheat at country stations this season, and still gave little sign of holding wheat back.

Corn and oats displayed stubborn resistance to selling pressure and received good support on price dips. Word of 500,000 bushels of corn having been taken for export was a steadying factor.

Provisions had a rather firm tone, with moderate buying and offerings light.

QUIET DEALING SEEN IN COTTON MARKETS

Activity to Await Buying of Spinners and Yielding to Lower Prices.

(Associated Press.)

With cotton prices about 11 points lower than they were carried by the break which followed the Government crop estimate last week, the trade seems to believe there will be a quiet market until either the South gives way or spinners become more active buyers.

Having once had the experience of selling this year's cotton at better than 9 cents a pound, farmers are unwilling to let go while values hover around 6.36 cents. The 9-cent figure is said to have been set as a price objective by 90 per cent of those with staple in their possession. The holding movement has advanced the asking basis to the highest point ever known in the Spartanburg, S. C., territory.

It was said at Charlotte, N. C., that farmers apparently needed no bank assistance in carrying their cotton. The crop was made with the smallest outlay of cash since 1889. Farmers and their families did all the field work and now are doing most of the picking. They seem able to keep their cotton on skids on the ground in front of their houses.

Some do not believe prices can advance far from current levels without meeting pressure but they are undeniably below cost of production and right where, it is said, trade buying could have a stabilizing influence. Values are only about 2 cents a pound better than at the low time in June but speculative demand has become extremely cautious because of the natural timidity of markets just before a national election.

Southern mill centers said demand for raw cotton was unusually quiet for this time of the season and New England centers said demand was spotty and irregular due, in part, to the decline in prices.

Mill operations, however, were said to continue steady expansion and that additional orders for winter and spring delivery of cloths were being taken.

Demand in Steel Is Still Moderate

Ingot Output Is Estimated at 19 Per Cent of Capacity.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Improvement in steel demand continued of moderate proportions this week, still reflecting steady buying by smaller consuming interests. Ingot production was estimated at 19 per cent of capacity for the country, accounted for by expanding demand for tin plate, tubular products, sheets and bars. Further loans for structural projects and for railroad repairs have been announced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but they have not materialized into orders. Demand from the automobile industry is held up pending new models. Prices held unchanged. Demand for pig iron improved further in some districts, at steady quotations.

Demand for copper remained dull, as European quotations continued soft, causing consumers here to withhold purchases. Producers hold nominal quotations unchanged at 6¼ cents for electrolytic, while concessions said to be available in second-hand quarters attract no buying interest. An important fabricator is quoted to the effect that there has been a distinct improvement in the copper and brass industry. Consumers, however, are said to have their immediate metal requirements supplied. Tin ruled steady and toward the close of the week improved buying developed, apparently influenced by the more cheerful tone of financial markets. This demand, however, was largely for dealer account with consumers taking relatively small quantities.

Lead was steady at the recent decline. Consumer buying improved moderately, being approximately equal to smelter intake. Generally, there was said to be little or no pressure to sell, with some interests not quoting the low levels prevailing. Zinc remained quiet. Buying interest was held to be developing slightly below quoted levels, but in the apparent absence of selling pressure business was restricted. A slight decline in antimony prices reflected a readjustment to Chinese quotations. In the absence of business, the market remained nominal.

BANK CLEARINGS

Bank clearings at 47 leading cities of the United States for the week ended October 12, 1932, totaled $3,597,663,000 as against $5,126,432,000 in the preceding week. This represents a decline of 29.8 per cent and is 45.3 per cent less than in the corresponding week of last year. The decrease at cities outside New York City was not quite so great, the total value reported being $1,430,456,000, as compared with $1,851,171,000 in the preceding week. Much of the decline shown this week was due to the five-day period against six days last week. After making corrections for the shorter week and the usual seasonal change, due to fewer quarterly payments, &c., the decline becomes rather minute. The adjusted index of clearings outside of New York City, as compiled by Bradstreet's Weekly, now stands at 39.6 per cent of the 1928-30 average, as against 39.7 last week and 59.6 last year. New York City declined 33.8 per cent from last week and the other cities of the Middle Atlantic section were affected to a similar degree. The Northwestern States made the best showing for the week, declining only 5.4 per cent. The Mountain region declined 9.6 per cent. The following table gives the clearings by cities, arranged geographically, for this week and last, together with per cent changes as compared with the same week of last year. RAILROADS CHEERED BY TRADE'S OUTLOOK

Moderate Loadings Advance Points to Earnings Gain, Bankers Say.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The moderate but well sustained improvement in revenue freight loadings of class 1 railroads, has been hailed by bankers and railroad men as one of the most encouraging signs now pointing to possible business improvement.

Statisticians now are in agreement that the percentage increase in weekly loadings since the week ended last August 6—when carloadings reached their low ebb—has been of more than usual seasonal proportions. Moreover, they point out that a major portion of this increase in revenues had gone directly into the bank accounts of the carriers because there was relatively little increase in their operating expenses.

However, encouraging as they consider this improvement to be, railroad statisticians point out that earnings are still far below the total needed to place the carriers on a profitable basis.

Deficit Still High.

In the first half of 1932, they note, the roads sustained an actual deficit of more han $127,000,000. Standard Statistics Co. estimates that, even with the recent improvement, the carriers will show a deficit of probably $90,000,000 in the second half, an indicated total loss of about $217,000,000 for the full year, or roughly 69 per cent of their aggregate fixed charges.

The importance of the recent traffic gains to the carriers was shown in the final figures for August. While freight revenues showed only a moderate increase over July receipts, nearly all of this gain was carried directly to net operating income. Total net operating income for the class 1 carriers was $28,368,000, an improvement of 145 per cent over July.

A statement which attracted considerable attention during the past week was furnished by the New York Central system. Freight carloadings for the week ended October 8 totaled 95,561, marking the tenth consecutive increase in weekly loadings, and, with a single exception, the tenth week in which the margin of decline compared with the 1931 period was further reduced. Last week's total was 14.6 per cent below total carloadings of the system in the corresponding week of last year. In the first full week of September, the 1932 traffic volume was 26.0 per cent below last year's traffic flow.

Increase Is Distributed.

Not all roads have shown so consistent an increase, but analysis of incoming reports indicates that the gains made during the past two months have been fairly evenly distributed throughout the country.

The normal seasonal peak in carloadings is reached in October. Consequently, railroad students do not look for any prolonged gains from now on. Irregularity in weekly statements, influenced largely by weather conditions, is considered in prospect. Live stock shipments are expected to continue on the increase until Thanksgiving Day, but the seasonal peaks of grain, ore, lumber and coal loadings have about been reached, if the usual trend is to be followed. Consequently, it is figured that further headway, if made, will depend almost entirely upon the condition of general industry. Manufacturing activity is largely reflected in the weekly totals of miscellaneous freight shipments and of less-than-carlot shipments.

Throughout the recent gaining trend in loadings, these classifications have held up well. Some students contend that their performance has furnished one of the most encouraging supports for those people who are now hopeful that the low point of the depression has been reached, and that industry is again slowly starting forward.

Cigar Stores Face Receivers' Attack

Realty Company Moves to Have Bankruptcy Set Aside.

New York, October 15 (A.P.).—The Court & Montague Realty Corporation, of Brooklyn, has obtained a Federal court order, returnable Tuesday, requiring the trustee of the United Cigar Stores Co. of America to show cause why the bankruptcy should not be set aside. The petition for the order, which was consented to by State Superintendent of Banks Joseph A. Broderick as liquidator of the Bank of United States, charged the bankruptcy had been sought for the sole purpose of voiding valid leases and that the company is and always has been solvent.

Mr. Broderick's consent was necessary because the Bank of United States holds a mortgage on a piece of Brooklyn property owned by the petitioning realty company.

A restraining order appended to the show-cause order will, unless it be modified, prevent scheduled hearings before the referee Tuesday on motions by the trustee to disaffirm 60 leases, in St. Paul, Minn.; Chicago and Joliet, Ill.; Cleveland and Clinton, Ohio; Minneapolis, Minn.; New Orleans, La.; Atlanta and Athens, Ga.; Wichita Falls and Fort Worth, Tex.; Mobile, Ala.; Waterloo and Des Moines, Iowa; Kansas City, Kans.; Bay City, Mich.; Lexington, Ky.; Orlando, Fla.; Denver, Colo.; Seattle, Wash.; Steubenville, Ohio; Hutchinson and Topeka, Kans., San Francisco, Fresno and Pasadena, Calif.

Cotton Goods Trade Quiet.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Cotton goods were quiet, and easier in gray cloth sections today. Concessions on finished goods consist of extensions of discounts from last list prices. Fancies and checks, as well as plaids, are gaining in style favor in men's wear. Silk continued easy with silk goods quieter. Burlaps for spot delivery are firm.

Rayon Demand Increases.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Leading sellers say that demand for high count printed rayon crepes continues to expand, due to the interest of store buyers in the well styled prints wholesaling in the neighborhood of 55 cents.

Crude Oil Market Steady.

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Fuel oil dealers report a more active demand for fuel oil and a generally steadier market. It is said that jobbers are showing less inclination to shade prices.

Wall Street Briefs

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—Sales of Safeway Stores Co. for the four weeks to October 8 totaled $17,219,692 against $16,820,506 in the immediately preceding period. The company had 3,392 stores in operation.

Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. reports sales totaling $15,978,061 for the four weeks ended October 8, a decrease of 9.3 per cent from a year ago. The average number of stores operating in the recent period was 4,786 against 4,903 in the same 1931 period.

Cream of Wheat Corporation had profit of $990,924, or $1.65 a share, for the first nine months, compared with $1,133,039, or $1.88 a share, a year ago.

The Chile Nitrates Sales Corporation today announced its season price schedule on Chile nitrate of soda. The quotation for October delivery is $25.50 a ton (2,000 pounds). November delivery is $26 a ton, while December to June is $26.50. Previous prices have been for spot delivery only.

Fifteen banks suspended business in the past week, compared with sixteen in the preceding week, the American Banker reports. Closings for the year to date are 1,169 and reopenings total 206.

Unfavorable dividend changes during the week totaled sixteen, or the same as in the previous week, the Standard Statistics Co. reported today. This is a considerable reduction from the September average of 35 per week and the August average of 36. Favorable changes for the week totaled five, compared with six the week before.

Exports of American cotton in the past week totaled 208,000 bales, compared with 174,000 in the same week last year, the New York Cotton Exchange reported today. Exports for the season to date are 1,525,000 bales, against 1,099,000 in the corresponding period of last year.

New York State savings banks gained 4,443 new accounts in September and new deposits totaled $101,419,170, against withdrawals of $106,329,097, Henry R. Kinsey, president of the Savings Banks Association of the State of New York, announced today.

Indian Burial Ground Reveals Framed Picture

The Dalles, Oreg. (U.P.)—Clee Remington, Wasco County wheat rancher, opened what he believed to be an Indian burial ground and found among miscellaneous articles the ancient red men were wont to bury with the corpse a painted photograph of Zachary Taylor set in a metal frame. The picture clearly is recognizable, even though the frame is dilapidated.

The burial ground is somewhat of a curiosity to pioneers in this area because they fail to recall Indian encampments in that section.

Canal Project for Power Development Planned

Columbus, Nebr. (U.P.)—Twenty east-central Nebraska counties are included in an area designed to benefit from the proposed development of a Loup River canal project for development of power. A Federal Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan may be sought for the project.

It is proposed to divert water from the Loup River near Genoa and carry it seventeen miles through a canal to a point near Columbus where a 100-foot fall from a bluff is available. A power unit at this point would develop 64,000 horsepower, engineers have estimated.

State Reports Birth Rate Will Be Lowest Recorded

Harrisburg, Pa. (U.P.)—Pennsylvania birth records for 1932 indicate the total will be lowest in the history of the State health department.

The total number of births reported for the first six months aggregated 84,616, as against about 89,500 for the same period in 1931.

The 1932 rate to date is 17.3 per 100,000. The 1931 rate was 18.3. The 1930 rate was 24.0.

"The downward curve is practically continuous for the past ten years," the department reported.

Skeleton of Man Revives Old Legend

St. Marys, Ohio (U.P.)—An old legend that two men lost their lives in 1840 while walking through an unexplored forest to New Knoxville, Ohio, has been revived with the finding of a human skeleton in a gravel pit near that town.

According to the story, the men starved to death, and their bodies, found months afterward, were buried near the spot where the bones were found.

Erie Steel in Bankruptcy.

Cleveland, Oct. 15 (A.P.)—A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed in Federal Court today by the Lake Erie Steel Corporation through its president, M. N. Weiner. Liabilities were listed at $325,109 and assets to $623,580.

Swindle Operation Believed to Be Lawful

Indianapolis (U. P.)—An ingenious swindle operation, believed to be within the law, is being investigated here by the Better Business Bureau.

A restaurant proprietor gave a 40-cent meal to a man who complained he had not eaten for three days. As the man was about to leave he pulled a handkerchief from his pocket and a $10 bill fell out. The restaurant owner seized him, gave him a lecture and sent him on his way with $9.60.

When the proprietor took the bill to a bank he found it was counterfeit. He was told, however, that the man could not be prosecuted because he had not actually passed the bill.

Suit Results From Operating Scissors

Tipton, Ind. (U.P.)—A suit for $25,000 has been filed here by Mrs. Della Stewart because, she alleges, a 5½-inch pair of scissors was left in her abdomen after an operation. The suit is against Dr. Stanley Cotton, who performed an appendicitis operation on Mrs. Stewart, in Kokomo.

Mrs. Stewart charged that another operation was necessary a year later, to remove the scissors. She alleges that she was permanently disabled, due to negligence of the surgeon.

Motorist Asks Judge To Revoke His License

When arraigned on a public intoxication charge in city court, Blade was fined $10 and costs by Judge Ben Ball.

"I want you to suspend my driving license, judge, so I can keep out of trouble," he told Judge Ball.

The judge revoked the license for six months.

Valveless Motor For Boats Invented

Indianapolis (U.P.)—Invention of a valveless four-cylinder motor for boats is claimed here by John Irvine, who says he worked eighteen years on the project. Irvine believes the invention may result in vast alterations in engine production.

Valveless motors of two cylinders are in use, according to Irvine, but four-cylinder engines failed because of sticking of cylinders. Irvine said he had overcome this difficulty and found his invention to be a success in several tests.

The motor is water-cooled and is capable of driving a small craft 40 miles an hour, according to its inventor.

Ancient Battle Relics Discovered in Ditch

Hanford, Calif. (U.P.)—What were believed to be relics of a forgotten battle in the Spanish conquest of California were found in an irrigation ditch near here.

The relics, found by two Hanford men, included a number of skulls believed to be those of native California Indians, and a rusted sword of the type used by officers of Spanish troops. Indications were, the finders said, that the officer died in the battle.

Large Dealers in Hides Sell at Reduced Prices

New York, Oct. 15 (A.P.)—Trade circles hear that one of the big producers recently sold a small quantity of spot hides at a decline of 1½ cents a pound from the previous sale.

The transaction aroused interest inasmuch as the big producers have been reluctant to sell at the reduced prices and have been accumulating their stocks for the past month or so.

Trained Dogs Make Living for Owner

Topeka, Kans. (U.P.).—When the depression left B. H. Purdy without a job, he didn't have to stand in the breadline nor live with relatives.

He trained two dogs to make a living for him. The dogs, of mostly German shepherd parentage, are trained as walking signboards. They attract attention toting theater advertisements. In Denver they were used in a charity drive.

Air Lines Cooperate In Reservations

New York (U.P.).—Arrangements have been completed between American Airways, Inc., and Imperial Airways of Great Britain for the handling of reservations over the lines served by the respective companies. Imperial Airways flies from Great Britain to points on the continent, to India and Africa, while American Airways covers the United States from coast to coast and Canada to the Gulf.

Prospectors Return To Hills Seeking Gold

Graybeards who panned gold long ago are packing grub and pans and seeking gold in the stream beds and mountains of the State. Young men out of jobs also are taking up the gold hunt.

The State vocational education department has formed several classes to teach men how to pan.

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 15.—Zone police schools, standards of service for policewomen, the police department's responsibility for automobile accidents and selecting the field of service for the policewoman in a small town are some of the subjects to be discussed at the seventh annual convention of the Virginia Police Executives Association to be held here Monday and Tuesday of next week.

The sessions will be held at Monticello Hotel. The meeting will be called to order at 11 o'clock Monday morning by J. M. Broughton, chief of police of Portsmouth, president of the association. Following luncheon, committees will be appointed, after which the executives will be taken on a sightseeing trip to Monticello, Ash Lawn and the university. In the evening the visitors will be guests of the city at a banquet, with Verbon Kemp, secretary of the local chamber of commerce, acting as toastmaster.

The opening address of the second day of the convention will be made by T. McCall Frazier, director of motor vehicles, Richmond, who will discuss the police work of his department. Other speakers will be Rhoda J. Milliken, director of the Woman's Bureau, Metropolitan Police Department, Washington, who will define standards of service for policewomen; Agnes Ferriter, of the police department of Lancaster, Pa., who will point out the field of service for the policewoman in a small town, and Chief of Police John S. At the afternoon session, which will end the convention, officers for the ensuing year will be elected and committee reports heard. The lone speaker will be Ernest W. Georgetown University.

The Mask and Bauble Club of Georgetown University, which has done much in the last ten years to raise the standards of amateur dramatics in the College of Arts and Sciences, is preparing for another active year under a new moderator and officers.

The Rev. John C. Murray is the new moderator of the dramatic club, with R. Vernon Murphy of the senior class, president. A new office, that of secretary, was created by the club and is being filled by Edward J. Fahy, another senior. The production staff this year is composed of the following officers: Allen B. Crunden, business manager; Arch J. Collins, stage manager, and Joseph N. Monaghan, properties and costumes. The club was again fortunate this year in securing the services of Denis E. Connell as coach.

Efforts will be directed this year at stimulating the competitive spirit among the members of the Mask and Bauble Club and definite plans for the year's productions are to be put before the student body at an early date.

Student activities at the school of law are beginning with a result that the third year afternoon class and the Carroll Law Club met last week and elected officers. Charles V. Koons of the District of Columbia, was chosen president of the class and with him will be associated the following: Erling B. Saxhaug, of Minneapolis, Minn., vice president; Harry L. Ryan, of the District of Columbia, treasurer; Fred J. Lawton, of the District of Columbia, secretary; James T. Clark, of Ellicott City, Md., historian, and J. Godfrey Butler, of the District of Columbia, sergeant at arms.

Robert W. Criscuolo, of Trenton, N. J., was elected chancellor of the Carroll Law Club. The other officers are James J. McTigue, of Holyoke, Mass., vice chancellor; Edward S. Gall, of Bridgeport, Conn., recorder; Howard Boyd, jr., of the District of Columbia, comptroller, and Andrew J. Coleman, of Willsville, Ohio, as censor.

Maj. Thomas C. McDonald, of Philadelphia, has offered a gold medal in competition to the student body of the university on a subject pertaining to Poland. The medal will be awarded to the winner on March 4, the birthday anniversary of Pulaski, the Polish patriot.

The subjects for the contest have been announced as follows: "America's Debt to Poland" and "The Boy Saint of Poland." The essays are limited to 3,000 words and are due not later than February 15.

With the selection of Basil T. Moore as chairman of the junior prom, usually the biggest event of its kind at the college, the whole junior class is cooperating to outdo the successes of recent years. The date of the prom is as yet unsettled. Immediately upon his election, Chairman Moore appointed a committee of eight assistants. They are Frederick Waters, Thomas Quinn, John McVoy, Philip A. Hart, Thomas Stapleton, George Looser, Gerald Dolan and J. Bernard Cook.

Word has reached Washington of the marriage at Detroit, Mich., of Louis A. Fisher, graduate of last June, to Miss Virginia Nesbit. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John L. Gipprich, S. J., regent of the Georgetown Medical School. The couple are honeymooning in Hawaii, the ceremony having taken place on October 8. Mr. Fisher, one of the outstanding students at Georgetown last year, was captain of the golf team and business manager of the "Domesday Book," the University's annual.

CAROLINA FORESTS CALLING HUNTERS

Special to The Washington Post.

Asheville, N. C., Oct. 15.—With the supply of game gradually on the increase as a result of protective measures, the 1932 hunting season gives promise of much sport for hunters in the mountains of western North Carolina. Mountain forests many thousands of acres in extent, deep wooded ravines and wild, sheltered coves provide in this section an ideal habitat for large and small game. The supply of animal life, formerly abundant, is being fostered and increased by a chain of game refuges extending across western North Carolina.

Changes in the game regulations with shortening of seasons and bag limits have also aided in the propagation of wild life. The season for black bear, formerly extending from October 1 to February 15, has been shortened to end on December 31, and the bag limit, formerly unlimited, has been changed to one bear each season. Numerous bear hunting parties have already ventured into the mountains in search of bruin in his native haunts.

Deer in the mountains, particularly in the vicinity of the game refuges, will be sufficient in supply to provide good hunting this year. In western North Carolina the season for deer hunting opens on November 1 and extends to December 15, with a bag limit of two in one season. Extending in a chain across the State and including the Wayah Bald Refuge, near Franklin, N. C.; the Pisgah National Game Preserve, near Asheville; the Mount Mitchell Game Refuge, near Black Mountain, N. C.; the Daniel Boone Refuge on Grandfather Mountain in the Linville, N. C., section, and the Andrew Johnson Game Refuge near Hot Springs, N. C., are reservoirs of wild life covering a total of over 200,000 acres of mountain forests.

All of the refuges have been stocked with bear, deer, wild turkeys and other game animals and birds which are under perpetual protection from hunters. Within a few years the 450,000 acres of the new Great Smoky Mountains National Park will also be stocked with game, adding a sixth link in the chain of refuges. Overflow of game from the refuges provides good hunting in surrounding forests during the open seasons.

Community Center To Give "Pinafore"

Operetta Will Be Produced at Central High Auditorium Tuesday.

One of the many plans of the Community Center Department for the coming season will be inaugurated Tuesday evening in the auditorium of Central High School, when "Pinafore" is presented by the opera group, directed by Miss Estelle Wentworth, in response to repeated requests that the operetta that was so successful last summer at the Sylvan Theater be given indoors.

The opera will be a "benefit" performance in more than one way, for it is planned by Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, director of the Community Center Department, to offer, perhaps several times this winter, interesting operas, plays and dance concerts by Washington players at "depression prices," in order that all may enjoy the presentations and also to use the proceeds of these performances as a basis of a fund for further civic work throughout the coming winter.

Back of the presentation of "Pinafore" is also the hope that the First Lady of the land may be in the city and able to be present Tuesday evening, because Mrs. Hoover was planning to attend the outdoor presentation of the Gilbert & Sullivan opera last summer and only a last-minute engagement prevented her arrival.

Presentation of Farce Slated.

St. Gabriel's Players will present "A Lucky Break," a farce in three acts, in St. Paul's Hall, Fifteenth and V streets northwest, on Monday and Tuesday nights, October 24 and 25.

Smiling South Sea Isles Seen in Imaginary Cruise

By DARRELL PRESTON AUB.

"Fertile golden islands Floating on a silver sea"

sang the immortal Shelley of the South Sea Gardens of Eden, which our group of Washington Post travelers are now approaching on our cruise of the Lurline.

Our imaginary preview last week of this "South Seas and Oriental Cruise," which will really sail from New York next January 12, left us after our visit to Hawaii. Then we crossed the Equator and made the acquaintance of his majesty, King Neptune, from whom we received our diploma as "old salts," or "weathered tars," or whatever the Old Man of the Sea calls his minions.

It is five days of sailing from Hawaii to Pago Pago, Samoa, our next port in the smiling South Seas. Our lovely seagoing home, the Lurline, now on her royal coronation tour as "Queen of the Pacific," is full of blandishments to make the days and nights of cruising delightful epics in charming living. Her facilities for entertainment and sports of every kind, from a beautiful swimming pool outdoors in the sunshine, to the fully equipped modern gymnasium—her galaxy of brilliant public rooms, are uniquely decorated and furnished—her spacious staterooms, with perfect ventilating system, full-length mirrors and almost every one with private bath—her concerts, masquerades, bridge tournaments—all this and other numerous activities, make us feel that we are in a fashionable resort, one that takes us places, as the days and nights fly swiftly and memorably by.

In Wake of Capt. Cook.

Let us pause a moment after an exhilarating game of shuffleboard, and as we sit sipping our tea in the pretty latticed veranda cafe, let our thoughts drift dreamily to the voyage ahead. Ours is a voyage of discovery, following in the wake of Capt. Cook and Bougainville and Tasman, and all that throng of venturesome navigators who made known the vast Pacific.

Memory turns to South Sea literature we have read long ago. Once more we are cruising with Robert Louis Stevenson in the "Casco," and with Jack London in the "Snark." Once more we open with delight Frederick O'Brien's classic "White Shadows in the South Seas." For us on this cruise romance becomes reality! Our eyes see the strange volcanic peaks towering high into the blue; we behold the palm-crested coral islands with the glittering white beaches and placid lagoons beyond; we breathe the fragrance of hibiscus and frangipani and orange-blossoms, and all the wild aromas of the jungle. We get to know and love the simple, mild-mannered people of Polynesia.

Samoa towers on the horizon a feathery etching silhouetted against a sky of glowing tints. We approach Pago Pago, on one of the northern islands. We are met by a flotilla of native craft, crowded with the picturesque folk of the islands. They offer up for sale all the luscious fruits of the tropics, garlands of flowers, shells, tapa cloth, beaten out of bark and painted, and fans.

U. S. Flag Flies Over Island.

The United States flag flies over this island of the Samoan Archipelago. The other islands were German territory before the war, but now they are British, their government administered by New Zealand under mandate from the League of Nations. The history of Samoa has been crowded and eventful ever since its discovery by the Hollander, Roggeveen, in 1722.

Our day here is filled with strolls among the mushroom-shaped huts and along the fringes of gorgeously flowered jungles. And as a climax, we witness the picturesque Siva-Siva dance, an impressive ceremonial to the many-handed god, Siva.

Onward through the South Seas. Two days later we are among the bushy-haired Fijians, in Suva, the metropolis of Fiji, the greatest of the South Sea group. Suva lies beside an expansive, reef-guarded harbor, at the base of low hills. In the purple distance beyond the mountains rise to an altitude of 4,000 feet. "Fiji!" Something wild and primitive seems to ring in the sound of the name itself. And there was reason to fear the Fijians long ago. They were cannibals, and a terror to castaways. But now they are entirely law-abiding and hospitable. Since the British government took control of these islands in 1874 it has sought to disturb native customs as little as possible, and many of the interesting features of the life of old yet remain, not, however, the eating of roast "long pig."

Exhibition of Spear Throwing.

We take a motor drive along the Prince's highway to the plantations of the Rewa River, where we see the native's carefree, laughing way of life in primitive villages, nestling against the lush, flaming beauty of the jungles. We return to witness an exhibition of spear throwing, warclub dances and eerie rites performed by natives in the fantastic regalia of their barbaric past. Long after Suva has dipped below the horizon our memory will throb with the pulse of pounding gourds and the rhythmic chants of crouching warrior bands.

Our next port of call is Auckland, the colorful metropolis of New Zealand, where we spend two interesting days. This city, with a population of over 200,000, has been called "the most beautifully situated city in the world" by Viscount Northcliffe. This city of splendid buildings, spacious parks, beautiful homes, smart, gay clubs and a charming social life—in other words, a city with the culture and amenities of life of the West—is a great contrast to the idyllic, yet primitive, conditions of the islands just visited. Auckland and Wellington, the capital of the Dominion, are a contrast to the rest of New Zealand, too.

Scenery Is Unsurpassed.

New Zealand is a land unsurpassed in scenic attractions. In the attraction of an unusual people who live within its boundaries, too. For of its 1,500,000 inhabitants, 65,000 are Maoris, one of the physically finest races in the world, whose dignity and culture survive the exchange of civilizations.

When New Zealand became known to Europeans it was inhabited by the Maories, a Polynesian race who had colonized the islands some centuries before, wiping out their predecessors. Throughout the island we find those fascinating Maori carvings and houses and other relics. When we visit the museum in Auckland we will see much of Maori art and antiquity. To Capt. Cook, who visited New Zealand in 1769, belongs the credit of being the first European, as far as is known, to set foot on these shores, though Tasman, the Dutch navigator, tried to land there in 1642, but was kept off by the hostility of the natives.

It is said that New Zealand is a miniature of the whole world, and that no other counrty of its size is so varied and complete. It contains mountains, snow-capped peaks, glaciers, volcanoes, geysers, thermal springs, water-falls, lakes, fiords and enticing white beaches. To further beguile the tourist there is great fishing sport and magnificent big-game shooting. We enjoy many of these natural glories on our automobile drives during our stay here. Finally we sail onward.

Geysers and Maori Villages.

For those of us who wish to see more of the country there is an optional tour to Rotorua to see the geysers and Maori villages. The whole party is now on the Lurline. It is February 16; we sail on to Sydney, Australia.

We come to Sydney, through Port Jackson, a most magnificent harbor, some say the loveliest in the world. This is a fittting introduction to Australia. The City of Sydney itself is just as wonderful in its man-made beauty as the harbor in its natural grandeur. With the population of more than 1,000,000, all whites, it is a real world metropolis, modern in every way. Chief among the city's attractions are its extensive and unusually fine beaches, where the spectacular sport of surf-riding is enjoyed.

Like New Zealand, Australia is a land of outdoor sports. Here all the sports one can desire can be enjoyed. The golden sunshine that is the very essence of Australia permeates everything. This lavish land has an undisputable place in the sun.

Australia, the most ancient continent, has on it the most recent civilization! The most primitive natives in the world, known as the "aborigines," live here in the "bush," the unexplored Australian wild country. This country is prodigal of everything but rain. Millions of years ago, when Asia and Europe were still for the most part under water, Australia was already dry land. Many of the animals here bear evidence of having developed from primitive species long since extinct elsewhere. And here exists vegetation which is found in other lands only in the most ancient fossil formations. "The birthplace of the world," you will say.

Beautiful Australian Beaches.

Our first afternoon in Sydney is devoted to a motor ride to the lovely Coogee and Bondi beaches. We also visit the aboriginal settlement at La Parouse, where we see the native blacks of Australia exhibit their marvelous prowess with the boomerang and spear. Another time we drive to Tom Ugly's Point and Sublime Point, from where we behold far-flung seascapes, unsurpassed in grandeur. Among the unusual animals in Australia are the queer koila, the living "teddy" bears, and we motor to the beautiful Kuran-gai Chase district for a delightful hour or two among these living toys.

For those of us who wish to see more of Australia than this program there is an optional tour available to the Jenolan Caves, through the Blue Mountain resorts, and through the agricultural and pastoral areas to Penrith. The group which takes this tour will rejoin the main party of the cruise in Sydney and sail onward together to the other ports of call awaiting us on the cruise. Such as Port Moresby, in primitive New Guinea, for instance, and to all the glamorous cities of the Malay Peninsula, China and Japan.

But we shall continue next week. Meet us again on the Lurline next Sunday on this page and we shall sail on our adventurous cruise of the South Seas and the Orient.

Freedom From Oppression

Taken from the Christian Science Monitor.

Nothing, perhaps, is more urgently needed in the world today than something that will lift the oppression that is confusing mankind. From the standpoint of human endeavor a great effort is being made to relieve this condition; yet there are many still bewildered and uncertain because of a sense of fear over which they believe they have no control. The time is ripe for each one of us to meet his individual obligation in destroying this self-imposed slavery to material thinking. As we free our own thought of apprehension, through a better understanding of what constitutes man's right to freedom, we shall see that oppression has no authority to hold us in bondage.

The discoverer and founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," presents the solution to this human problem when she says (p. 227), "Discerning the rights of man, we can not fail to foresee the doom of all oppression." Oppression implies an abuse of power or authority; therefore, as soon as we begin to discern the nature and source of true power, noting the difference between real power and oppressive power, we find the way to restore harmony to our consciences. In Christian Science, we learn that God is the only power. God, good, being omnipotent or all-powerful, there can be no evil power to oppress humanity. Strip oppression of its assumed power or authority and it is doomed to annihilation.

The Bible abounds in proofs of divine help experienced in times of cruel oppression. Because of his abiding faith in the ever present God, Moses led the children of Israel triumphantly out of the land of the oppressor toward the promised land. When in dire distress, Abraham, Jacob, Daniel, Paul and many others were shown the way out by the understanding of God's omnipotence and omnipresence which delivered them. Christ Jesus spoke with authority and dominion when he said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." And this divine law understood can liberate us today from all material beliefs that depress us, and heal, restore, stabilize and bring the inward peace that comes with real understanding.

"Discerning the rights of man" we see ourselves as the children of God, subservient to no power but that of the divine, infinite, ever present Mind, which is ever operating in true consciousness. All the apparent discord in the world has been caused by ignorance of God and man's inseparable relation to Him, and a right understanding of this divine coexistence alone will restore harmony.

Ponder for a moment some of the rights of man and the discernment resulting from a spiritual instead of a material viewpoint. False education, tradition, superstition, and mortal opinion based on sense evidence have conveyed a wrong concept of existence. But man, made in God's image and likeness, was never bound by any material laws, never overwhelmed by false opinions or conditions, or oppressed by them. The true spiritual man is the idea of God, divine Principle; he is always spiritual, never physical. And spiritual man expresess all the qualities of Mind.

Awakening to the truth that man is the living witness to divine Mind is the means through which Love meets the human need. Appreciating and appropriating, claiming and enjoying our birthright as children of God, gives us new vision of ourselves and of our neighbor. Infinite Love is universal and available now, and infinite Love is able to lift one above any belief of wrong environment, hard times, unemployment, temperament, domination, or any of the other taskmakers that seem to oppress us. Divine Mind acts and causes its likeness to act in accord with divine law. It is the discernment of this law operating through man which gives us the authority and the courage to know the power of Truth, which never fails and which frees us from all sense of oppression.

THOUGHTS ON 'GOOD EARTH' PLUS THE PASSING PARADE

By NELSON B. BELL

IF for no other reasons—and there were many—the gratifyingly successful engagement of "The Good Earth," which was terminated in the National Theater last night, would command a place of eminence in the current record of the theater as the new season's first tangible and conclusive evidence of an enduring public enthusiasm for the more serious and substantial forms of drama.

Here was definite refutation of the insistent lamentation that the living theater, if not already dead, is dying. Serious, somber and, by the playwrights' license in manipulating the closing scenes of the play away from the corresponding passages in Mrs. Buck's distinguished novel, more tragic in climax and denouement than the book, "The Good Earth," nevertheless, attracted throngs of eager patrons equal to the capacity of the Capital's most spacious playhouse.

This, of course, in some measure, at least, was due to the wide popularity of Mrs. Buck's original prize-winning work. The desire to witness what had been conservatively heralded as a superlative performance by Mme. Alla Nazimova, an actress whose artistry had been denied Washington for many seasons, also, no doubt, had its effect. But outweighing both of these considerations seems to have been the indisputable fact that the theatergoing public insists only that it be assured worthy effort on the part of playwright, producer and cast to insure its generous response at the box office.

Astute observers of theatrical trends have declared that in this day and generation there is no middle ground a producer may safely tread; that plays are either instantaneous and colossal hits or quick and unequivocal failures. Even if this be as true as it appears to be at the moment, it should serve less as a discouragement than as a spur to those intent upon preserving the most cherished traditions of the animate theater. "The Good Earth" is visible proof.

* * * *

THERE were many who watched the remedial ministrations of a group of the theater's most profound diagnosticians, during "The Good Earth's" clinical week at the National, who contemplated proceedings with the wraith of the late David Belasco hovering about the edges of their consciousness.

They perceived in the work many of those colorful qualities that would have been so dear to the heart of the lamented genius of realistic effect. They imagined with what intensity midday's warming rays would have beaten upon the wasting body of the "old one," sitting in the sun; how in addition to the field of real earth upon the stage, the figures in the play would have been made more indigenous to the soil and less perfectly laundered than were Wang Lung and his woman, O-Lan, even when ostensibly sweating over their crops.

Some even went so far as to conjure a scene depicting the private inner court, occupied only by Lotus and Cuckoo, her slave, where any other member of the household than Wang Lung was an intruder and where his riches were lavished.

For it was in this sort of thing that the genius of Belasco lay. The whole history of his long and honorable career in the theater is written in terms of startling and flamboyant effects rather than any profundity of thought or purpose. That and an uncanny capacity for fitting the content of a play to the capabilities of the actors selected to portray its pivotal roles.

The Belasco productions form an unbroken chronicle of shrewd and perfect casting to which may be directly traced the unchallenged preeminence of a long list of stars of the first flight.

The Titian temperament of Mrs. Leslie Carter, Belasco fitted with the melodramatic "Heart of Maryland," with the star swinging frenziedly from the bell-clapper to save her lover, and later with such burning excitations as "Zaza;" Blanche Bates he equipped with romances of a slightly gentler, but still vivid, hue, as witness "The Darling of the Gods" and "The Girl of the Golden West;" for Frances Starr he chose poignant, if not wholly placid, plays in which the penetrating pathos of one of the most appealing voices known to the stage might find provocative and touching uses—"The Rose of the Rancho," "The Easiest Way," "The Case of Becky," "Marie Odile" and "One," to name only a few.

The masculine counterpart of Miss Starr, in point of appropriate vehicle, was David Warfield, always with a tear in his voice—"The Auctioneer," "The Music Master," "The Return of Peter Grimm," "The Grand Army Man," not forgetting the magnificent, but unproductive, spectacle of "The Merchant of Venice."

The later-day Leslie Carter was Miss Lenore Ulric, with her "Tiger Rose," "Kiki," "Mima," "Lulu Belle" and the like.

Not one of these that possessed more than a superficial and ephemeral worth, beyond the glamour that Belasco was able to impart to it by the wizardy of electricity, pigments and an infinite patience in apprehending and perfecting details.

* * * *

With the basis of Pearl Buck's imposing fiction, the Theater Guild's passion for new and worthwhile endeavor and Belasco's command of all of the theater's material resources, what a monument to thespic genius might not have been reared by "The Good Earth!"

* * * *

OF quite a different texture is "The Laugh Parade," which Ed Wynn marches into the National Theater tonight. As the first musical attraction of the season, it is not too extravagant, I think, to surmise that "The Laugh Parade" may complete its week with a ledger whose balance will not compare disadvantageously with "The Good Earth's." Priority among entertainments of its kind, however, is not the sole basis for this conjecture.

Mr. Wynn, as has already been pointed out in this department's daily columns, occupies a position of some uniqueness in the American theater. Despite his uncertain voice, his nervous fidgeting and his tendency to befuddlement in the presence of an audience, Wynn is rated as the most surefooted of the native comedians. More important perhaps is the fact that he is the only star whose record discloses not a single stage failure.

After eleven years in two-a-day vaudeville, mostly with the Keith and Orpheum circuits, Ed Wynn's name went up in lights over the New Amsterdam Theater, New York, as one of the stars of the Ziegfeld "Follies" of 1914. After two years with the "Follies" he was signed by the Freres Shubert for their "Passing Show of 1916."

The following year, 1917, found Wynn doubling in two Broadway shows, "Doing Our Bit" and "Over the Top," his parts being so timed that he was able to dash by taxi from one theater to the other.

1919—Shubert "Gaieties."
1919-'22—The Ed Wynn "Carnival."
1922-'24—"The Perfect Fool."
1925-'27—"The Grab Bag."
1927-'29—"Manhattan Mary."
1929-'31—"Simple Simon."
1931-'32—"The Laugh Parade."

Aside from his starring engagements, Wynn has worked with many authors on books and dialogue for musical shows, notably with Gene Buck and Channing Pollock for the Ziegfeld "Follies." He collaborated with Harold Atteridge on "The Passing Show" and "Doing Our Bit;" with Phillip Bartholomew on "Over the Top;" with Rida Johnson Young on "Sometime" and with De Sylva, Brown and Henderson on "Manhattan Mary." Single handed he wrote in their entirety the books of "Simple Simon" and "The Laugh Parade," in its original form.

He can further qualify as a collector of royalties as the composer of upwards of one hundred songs and as the author of "Wynn's Crazy Crossword Puzzle Book" and the "Ed Wynn Ques-

Marlene Dietrich And an Ace Stage Bill Earle's Lure

Warner Bros. Earle Theater for the current week presents a screen and stage show which can rightfully be called "All-Star," with Marlene Dietrich, the screen's most glamorous actress, in her newest Paramount vehicle, "Blonde Venus," and a vaudeville program featuring Hal Le Roy and Mitzi Mayfair, "Ziegfeld Follies" dance stars, and Nan Halperin, peer of singing comediennes.

"Blonde Venus," directed by Josef von Sternberg, who discovered the alluring Dietrich three years ago and has been in charge of her four previous English-language films, presents Marlene Dietrich in the role of a woman who, to save her husband's life, accepts the love of another man. At first, cold-blooded about the proposition, she soon finds she is in love with her benefactor. When her husband discovers the situation he orders her from their home, and she is compelled to make a decision that leads to a highly dramatic climax.

Hal Le Roy, who returns to the Earle after a previous triumphant engagement a month ago, has with him this time Mitzi Mayfair, his former "Ziegfeld Follies" dancing partner. These two young dancing marvels present a program of the sensational dances that made them world-famous. Sharing honors on the same program is Nan Halperin, cleverest of singing comediennes, whose program will consist of fifteen minutes of comedy, songs and stories. Other acts are Vic Oliver, who calls himself Europe's gift to America; Al Johnston and Girls, offering a program of musical melodies, and Maxine Doyle, mistress of ceremonies.

The list of famous teams of stage and screen history has been swelled by one during the past two and a half years.

The Dietrich-Von Sternberg team had its origin in Berlin late in 1929. Von Sternberg, already a noted figure in the movie world, had been called there to direct Emil Jannings in "The Blue Angel," which was being made in English and German.

In search of a leading woman, Von Sternberg scoured Berlin, but without success. One night, half as a means of relaxation, half in hope of finding what he wanted, he went to a musical comedy. Miss Dietrich was its star, and the moment Von Sternberg saw her he knew she was the woman he had been seeking.

Gossamer Romance Continues Second Week on F Street

Norma Shearer's newest photoplay, "Smilin' Through," has just completed one week's successful run at Loew's Palace Theater and is beginning its second.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer borrowed Fredric March for Jane Cowl's stage play, adapted to the screen by Ernest Vajda and Claudine West. His list of hits includes "The Royal Family" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Leslie Howard is also in the cast. Some of his successes are "A Free Soul," "Never the Twain Shall Meet" and, on the stage, "The Animal Kingdom."

The story opens some 50 years ago when two young men love the same woman. The man that lost has grown old, in the picture, waiting for an opportunity to have revenge upon the other man. In his efforts to wreak vegeance, the old fellow tries to keep two young people apart. Discovering his mistake, he asks their forgiveness.

Others in the cast are O. P. Heggie, a veteran of the stage; Ralph Forbes, who does fine work in the last of the four leading roles; Beryl Mercer, David Torrence, Margaret Seddon and Forrester Harvey.

"Smilin' Through" is Norma Shearer's second venture into unusual drama. Her previous departure was in "Strange Interlude," and now in "Smilin' Through," she plays the intended bride and also the ward of Sir John Carteret. Here she is able to return in fantasy to the mind of her brooding lover—in which moments of reverie Miss Shearer appears twice in a single scene.

A Linguist.

Adolphe Menjou is the linguistic expert on the set of "A Farewell to Arms." Whenever some "bit" player has to speak either a line of a foreign language or a line with a foreign accent Menjou takes time out from his own role to coach the actor. Adolphe is a master of English, French, German, Spanish and Italian.

Shades of Camille!

Fifteen camellias a day for the next 24 days was the order placed this week with Paramount's private nursery by Stephen Roberts, director of "Night After Night." The order was caused by George Raft's liking for this type of flower, which he wears throughout the picture.

Crusoe Fairbanks And Ted Healy on Screen and Stage

This week Loew's Fox Theater is offering as its screen attraction Douglas Fairbanks in his latest picture, "Mr. Robinson Crusoe," a story of a modern De Foe hero with a sense of humor that is beyond description. In addition to the screen attraction, the vaudeville is headed by Ted Healy, the nationally known musical comedy star. He is assisted by his "Racketeers," including Howard, Fine and Howard, Marion Bonnell and Steven Brothers and Stevens. Others on the bill are Gracella and Theodore, Frank Donia and the Duponts.

Douglas Fairbanks, a young adventurer, makes a wager that he can live on an uninhabitated island for one month without any of the things civilization has to offer. He is taken up, and at once turns into a modern Robinson Crusoe. Being left on an island in the South Seas, with nothing but the clothing on his back and his dog, he improvises his first tool, an ax, and builds a home in the wilderness. Instead of being alone on this island, he finds a tribe of natives and makes friends with them. On another part of the island he finds a tribe with a beautiful girl.

One day when Doug is inspecting his traps he finds, not a lion or other animal for which the trap was intended, but this enchanting female. Before he discovered the trap, his man Friday, was frightened away by a hearty burst of static. In this way the people of the girl's tribe find out about the white man and prepare to carry out their cannibalistic rites.

When Doug's friends return they discover him about to be roasted for the evening meal. He offers to double his bet that he can get out of the mess he is in.

The girl's people, upon hearing that one of their women is in the hands of the whites, prepare for war and attack the tribe that was friendly to Doug when he first came to the island. The battle begins and this gives him a chance to escape. When he returns to the ship he finds the girl hidden in his stateroom. Again the wager is doubled, that he can get out of this mess, and he does.

Others in the cast are William Farnum, Earle Browne and Maria Alba. The picture was directed by Edward Sutherland. It is a United Artists production.

Ted Healy, the head-liner of the vaudeville, a musical comedy star of such shows as "Crazy Quilt," "The Gang's All Here," and Earle Carroll's "Vanities," and his hilarious "Racketeers," are entertaining with one of the greatest comedy acts that have been here in months. They have named their act "The Public Enemies of Blues," and that is just what it is.

Timely Burlesque Of Politics in Its Last Week at Met

With Jimmy "Schnozzle" Durante, George M. Cohan and Claudette Colbert in the featured roles, "The Phantom President," Paramount's screamingly funny and exceptionally timely comedy, stays at Warner Bros.' Metropolitan Theater for a second and final week, which ends Thursday night.

"The Phantom President" is an out-and-out comedy, which deals with a presidential campaign, with George M. Cohan making his talking picture debut, after more than a quarter of a century of stage success, in a dual role—a candidate lacking personality to win votes and a medicine show barker hired to impersonate him because he is not only a ringer for him but a figure oozing personality.

All goes well until the barker discovers the candidate is not on the "up and up" and that he himself is in love with Claudette Colbert, the candidate's fiancee. An amusing and dramatic climax ensues.

THE OLD WEST REVIVED IN COLUMBIA ROMANCE

"Ride Him, Cowboy," is the feature picture starring John Wayne, now being shown at Loew's Columbia Theater. Ruth Hall plays opposite Wayne, and Henry B. Walthall enacts the part of Miss Hall's father. Others in the cast are Harry Gribbon, the deputy sheriff; Frank Hagney, the "Hawk," a bandit, and Duke, the devil horse.

The picture opens with Frank Hagney, who poses as one of the first citizens of Cattleo, raiding Henry B. Walthall's ranch.

His foreman is knocked senseless and the blame is laid on Duke, who attacked the raiders and held them away until some one would come. Of course the villain in the sheep's clothing frames the picture so it appears that the horse did the harm and demands that he be killed. The horse is convicted and is about to be shot when a cowboy from Texas, John Wayne, asks if he may not try to tame the horse. The judge gives him a chance and before many days go by Wayne has the horse eating out of his hand.

These raiders have been terrorizing the community to such an extent that people are afraid to leave their homes. Wayne takes it upon himself to clean out the bandits.

In doing so, he learns who the leader is and is on his way to expose him to the authorities, when he is met by vigilantes and taken to the town as the leader of the gang. Another raid had taken place and Wayne's mouth organ had been left as evidence.

In the meantime the ranch foreman regains consciousness, and tells Ruth the truth about Hagney. She reaches John's side just as he is about to be hanged and exposes the town's most outstanding citizen as the leader of the criminals.

Widely Broadcast Mystery Play Has Capital Premiere

This mystery drama, from an original story by Barlett Cormack and J. Walter Ruben, the latter also directing, is known as "RKO-Radio Pictures Broadcasting Special," gaining that descriptive line through the fact that it was broadcast over a period of five weeks.

Following this broadcast, the feature was simultaneously released in over 400 RKO theaters on Friday, October 14. The special opening, therefore, given "The Phantom of Crestwood" at Keith's on Wednesday gives Washington the premier showing of the mystery drama.

Briefly, the story concerns Jenny Wrenn, a lady who has bestowed her favors on a group of extremely wealthy men. Finally she endeavors to marry the son of another wealthy man only to find that the boy will have nothing if he marries before reaching his twenty-fifth birthday. She brutally dismisses him and the boy jumps over a cliff, killing himself. She determines to reform her mode of living and in an endeavor to secure sufficient funds to take care of herself she forces four of the richest men she has known to gather at Crestwood, an estate in California, owned by one of these men. Here she demands an enormous sum from each. That night she is murdered just as a group of gangsters arrive who had been hired to get back letters held by the woman from still another man. And here is the unusual twist in the story—these gangsters unravel the mystery of who killed Jenny Wrenn in order not to have the crime pinned on them. It is stated to be the first mystery drama to have its solution worked out without having a detective or policeman involved in that solution.

As an added attraction, is the first in a series of revivals of the comedies that brought world fame and wealth to Charlie Chaplin. These Chaplin comedies, "Easy Street" being the one now presented, have had sound effects and music added.

Omigosh!

Stanley Smith, who made such a hit a few years ago with Nancy Carroll in "Sweetie" and "Honey," finds he has a double job in the supporting cast of the famous red-head's latest picture, "Hot Saturday." He didn't sign for it, but he does it to oblige Nancy—he sings softly offscene, just as the old-fashioned film "atmosphere" orchestras used to play, while the actress is rehearsing love scenes with Cary Grant and Randolph Scott.

Mr. McGuire Turns Out a Speedy Job On Universal Lot

Tragedy, sudden; the daring of a news-hawk, the audacity of an underworld chieftain's attempt to dictate to the President of the United States—all these unite to make "The Kidnaping of Ruth Drake" a corking mystery film. Lew Ayres, who achieved honors in "The Spirit of Notre Dame" and "All Quiet on the Western Front," is the star and the picture is the current attraction at the Rialto Theater.

William Anthony McGuire wrote the fast-moving story. McGuire is the man who turned out "Kid Boots," "It's a Boy" and "Twelve Miles Out." He was formerly Ziegfeld's librettist. Tay Garnett directed "The Kidnaping of Ruth Drake" and the supporting cast embraces Walter Catlett, Maureen O'Sullivan, Rollo Lloyd, Margaret Lindsay, Louis Calhern, Allan Dinehart, Nance O'Neill, Frederic Burton, Marjorie Gateson and Edward Arnold, recently of the National Theater Players.

Here is a film as modern and thrilling as the newest gang tale in the last edition. Its story is real, faithful, dramatic and boastful of novel twists of action and development.

In addition, to complete its program, the Rialto offers a short comedy, the newest Universal News, with Graham McNamee as the talking reporter, and a group of selected briefer subjects.

The background of modern metropolitan life—with its night clubs, its overnight changes in blues songs, its complex inanities—provides the panorama against which "The Kidnaping of Ruth Drake" projects its swift-moving action. It is the milieu in which Lew Ayres enacts the role of a thoroughly up-to-the-minute newspaperman. This is Mr. Ayres' first starring vehicle since "Night World."

McGuire wrote the story of the picture in three days, dialogued in five and then wondered why Universal couldn't film it over the week-end.

"Funny things, these movies," William Anthony opines. "They work slower than the stage. At first I didn't get the idea, having worked for the late Mr. Ziegfeld and rewritten whole acts of musical shows overnight, but finally it dawned on me that once a thing is imprinted on celluloid it's there for good. So the film producers do have an argument in favor of caution and taking time.

Five Remain.

Nearing the final choice of the Panther Woman in a Nation-wide contest to discover the girl most ideally suited to play that role in "Island of Lost Souls," Paramount officials announce that but five contestants remain. The quintet from among whom the Panther Woman will be named are Maxine Land, of Atlanta, Ga.; Gail Patrick, of Birmingham, Ala.; Lona Andre, of Nashville, Tenn.; Verna Hillie, of Detroit, and Kathleen Burke, of Chicago.

Mr. Wynn Marches His 'Laugh Parade' to Washington

The Perfect Fool Leads Merry Host In "Laugh Parade"

"The Laugh Parade," with Ed Wynn at his best, will be presented at the National Theater this week, beginning tonight. Never has "the perfect fool" done so well by himself in supporting talent, scenic lavishness and strikingly novel entertainment. His chorus of Wynnsome maids and "Keep Kissable" girls includes fourteen beauty contest winners and his specialty artists cover a wide range of headline speed, always with Wynn nudging at their elbows.

Tuesday night's performance will be eliminated to permit Wynn to to journey to New York for the regular weekly broadcast of his "fire chief" character. Matinees will be played on Wednesday and Saturday.

"The Laugh Parade" brought Wynn to the peak of his Broadway career with a run of eight months at the Imperial theater and for a triumphal coast-to-coast tour this season the original cast has been held practically intact. New principals are Elsa Ersi, a European music hall star, and Earle Oxford, of the last Ziegfeld Follies. To these are entrusted the two principal song hits of the production, "You're My Everything" and "Ooh, That Kiss."

Other principals are Jack Powell, Bartlett Simmons, Eunice Healey, Wilbur Hall, Frieda Mierse, the Di-Gatanos, Harry Seaman, Frank Seaman, Jerrie Rogers, George Prentice, Levenoria Sabalis, Eddie Cheney and the Albertina Rasch specialty dancers.

There are some startling new "inventions," of course, and more trick hats, oversize pants and other grotesqueries that are always a part of an Ed Wynn performance. He runs a Punch and Judy Show; tends bar in a speakeasy; tries his hand as a quick-change artist in a series of characterizations ranging from the Hunchback of Notre Dame to an old-time juggler, and appears astride Humphrey, his trick camel, as a traveler in strange lands.

"The Laugh Parade" was written and created by Wynn himself and was staged under his direction. Music was written by Harry Warren and lyrics by Mort Dixon and Joe Young. Albertina Rasch staged the dances.

Lawrence Tibbett Will Be Heard in A Concert Friday

The 1932-33 series of afternoon and evening concerts sponsored annually by Mrs. Wilson-Greene at Constitution Hall and the National Theater, will be inaugurated next Friday evening, October 21, at 8:30 o'clock, in Constitution Hall, with the only Washington concert appearance this season of Lawrence Tibbett, barytone of the Metropolitan Opera and a star of concert, radio and the screen as well.

Lawrence Tibbett has become, within the last three seasons, one of the most remarkable figures in American musical history. First achieving fame in concert, Tibbett next scaled the heights of the Metropolitan Opera, where he is today leading barytone. Braving the screen, one of the most exacting and difficult of all media for the artist, Tibbett scored three hits in succession and followed up that triumph by a series of radio broadcasts that lifted him at once into the front rank of ether stars.

Tibbett, who will be accompanied at the piano by Stewart Wille, will offer a miscellaneous program of songs starting with a group of three numbers, "Bois Epais," by Lully; "Che Fiero Costume," by Legrenzi, and "The Bailiff's Daughter" (Old English). His second group will consist of four numbers, "Nacht und Traume" (Schubert), "O Liebliche Wangen" (Brahms), "Allerseelen" (Strauss) and "Ewig" (Eric Wolff). A group of two piano numbers by Mr. Wille, "The White Peacock" (Griffes) and "Malaguena" (Lecuona), will precede an aria by Tibbett, "Eri Tu," from "The Masked Ball" (Verdi).

After the intermission, Tibbett will sing two more groups, the first of which will offer "Kingdom By the Sea" (Somervell), "Little Old Foolish Man" (Browning), "Land of Silence" (Quilter) and "The Gargoyle of Notre Dame" (Uterhart). The second after-intermission group will offer three songs of a characteristic Tibbett type, "Shake Yo' Brown Feet" (Carpenter), "Mam'selle Marie" (Imaginary Creole Ave Maria) (Guion), and "De Glory Road" (Wolfe).

Although Tibbett's concert is given on Friday evening, all five other concerts in the evening series will be given on Saturday evenings, it is announced.

"What Is Nana?"

"Nana" is a painting that no inhabitant in, or visitor to Washington, should fail to see. An hour spent in studying this marvelous production is an art education in itself. Thousands go to see "Nana" wherever it is exhibited. The painting is so marvelous in its similitude of life that it is with difficulty the spectator realizes that he is not gazing on a living, breathing being.

Exhibitions daily at 1318 G street northwest, are from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. The price of admission is 15 cents.

AT THE PLAY IN NEW YORK

By MARK BARRON.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (A.P.).—The new theatrical season has turned that long-awaited corner, and although prosperity hasn't been found lingering there, the situation is much better than it has been in many months.

The paucity of better class legitimate plays has been relieved by the arrival of several warmly welcomed dramas, and it is that veteran playwright, Rachel Crothers, who brings in the first hit play of the season.

"When Ladies Meet" is the answer to the prayers of the ticket brokers, and it must be given high honors with Miss Crothers' imposing list of successful comedies. It is much in the mood of her previous works, being witty and sophisticated discussions of the familiar problems of married life.

Mollie Ricardel and William Dubois write much in the same mood with the entertaining comedy, "I Loved You Wednesday." It concerns a young architect. He attempts to rekindle the flames of an old love affair with a dancer in Paris, but it remains for his understanding wife to show both that such things can't be done.

The Ricardel-Dubois combination has turned out a light, amusing story, dazzling with brilliant dialogue, but the show is hampered by the disappointing performances of Frances Fuller and Rose Hobart in the two leading roles.

EVER since his first "Americana" revue was the sensation of the town back in 1926, J. P. McEvoy has been trying to repeat that idea. He almost does it with a new edition, but he, himself, is the one who fails when the new "Americana" lobs into its several pitfalls.

He has assembled a showcase filled with dynamic dancers, an excellent comedian in "Red" Weber, a score of refreshing songs, a chorus line of beautiful girls and set them against a background of Albert Johnson's brilliant settings. The one fault of "Americana" is its humorless sketches, otherwise it is as scintillating a show as you will find in town.

Weber is not only a hilarious comedian who has been hiding these many years in vaudeville, but his singing of "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" thrilled the first nighters as they haven't been since they first heard Dennis King in "The Vagabond King."

GUTHRIE M'CLINTIC, awaiting the return of Wife Katharine Cornell from Europe, busied himself with the presentation of what many consider the late Edgar Wallace's best play. It is "Criminal at Large," an exciting mystery melodrama in the best Scotland Yard manner.

It concerns the efforts of William Harrigan, as the Scotland Yard inspector, to solve a series of mysterious strangulations in an ancient English country house, which provides indeed an eerie setting.

It is a breath-taking plot every minute. Not only for the adept manner in which the author maintains suspense, but also for the artful performances of Harrigan, Katharine Wilson and a young British actor named Emlyn Williams.

A NEW play in the French comedy manner called "Peacock" proves to be a shaky vehicle, but it is held well together by the pleasant performance of that grand old trouper, George Fawcett.

As an antique diplomat, Fawcett is never able to get over his youthful habits of "sowing wild oats," but it is this very misbehavior which snatches him from retirement and thrusts him back in political activity.

THE PASSING PARADE

tion Box," a syndicated newspaper feature.

* * * *

So, you used to be a newspaper man yourself once, eh? No wonder you're crazy!

* * * *

ALTHOUGH the event is so remote that the circumstances surrounding it are extremely vague, if not positively nonexistent, in the public mind, it was the production of "Blonde Venus," the current feature of prime importance at the Earle, that occasioned what at one time threatened to become a permanent schism on the Paramount lot.

So violent was the disagreement among the Messrs. Zukor, Lasky and Schulberg, on the one hand, and Herr Josef von Sternberg and his sirenic satellite, Frau Marlene Dietrich, on the other, that work on the picture was completely abandoned while the Herr Direktor assuaged his ire commuting between Hollywood and New York on fast trains, Frau Dietrich maintained an attitude of passive resistance and the Paramount panjandrums sat and waited. The vendetta finally burned itself out, as such things will with large stakes in the balance, with what result one may see for himself by journeying to Thirteenth street.

Around the corner in F street, and again around the corner in Fifteenth, are stars whose presence upon local screens recalls that distant era when Triangle and Mack Senett were in their heyday and motion pictures really had motion.

Current report has it that Douglas Fairbanks as he reveals himself in "Mr. Robinson Crusoe," is something more than a mere shell of his former self and, with the aid of Miss Maria Alba, delivers himself of performance that has much of the old fire to recommend it.

From personal observation I am able to testify that Mr. Charles Spencer Chaplin becomes once again the more humble and funnier "Charlie" in the revivals of his earlier hits, which have been considerably quickened in ludicrous appeal by the deft grafting on of modern musical accompaniment and "sound effects."

* * * *

So now, what with the National Symphony presenting its first concert on Thursday and Lawrence Tibbett appearing in recital on Friday, it is doubtful if at any time during the year much more "season" will be encountered than this week has to offer. There seems, therefore, to be little point in remaining longer out of the box-office line!

MITZI MAYFAIR, who rejoins Hal LeRoy to reunite the sensational dance team of the "Follies," headlining this week's vaudeville bill at the Earle.

RUDY VALLEE and his wife, the former Fay Webb, who arrive in the Capital today for the opening of the Silver Slipper tomorrow night.

TED HEALY, the rough-and-ready "nut" comic, who headlines the vaudeville program at Loew's Fox this week, assisted by his usual stooges.

"Bohemian Girl" Is Scheduled for an Early Production

From the many outstanding singers who compromise their membership, the Washington Light Opera Company has selected a cast of unusual capability to sing the leading roles in their first production, 'The Bohemian Girl," by Balfe.

For the present, two or more persons are rehearsing the more difficult roles as follows: Arline, Esther Ingram, Edith Jones; Gypsy Queen, Rita Reyos, Martha Wooley; Thaddeus, Kroom Bagranoff, Jesse Veitch, Eugene Swygert; Devilshoof, Neal Parrish, Melville Vietch; Florenstein, Raymond Pigott; Count Arnheim, Manuel Landman; Captain of the Guard, Howard Severe.

Many whose voices are equally well known appear in the choruses. The musical direction is in charge of Alfred Manning, whose ability is recognized in local music circles.

Season's Event to Be Celebrated at Gayety This Week

What is looked upon by burlesque fans as one of the outstanding events of the season is announced for the Gayety Theater, starting this Sunday matinee, when Jimmy Lake will offer a duplex attraction, "The Black and White" Revue.

This combined offering boasts a total enrollment of 60 comedians, singers and dancers. The White Revue features such well-known principals as "Hap" Freyer, Lew Petel, "Boots" Rush, Mary Walton, Ann Mitchell, Olga Petrone, the Four Merry Makers and Roy Butler.

The colored half of the entertainment consists of Bessie Smith, "Queen of the Blues;" Minto Kate, a song bird of distinction; Joe Byrd and Billy Higgins, billed as "America's greatest colored comedians;" Bill Bailey, late of the Cab Callaway unit; the Edna Taylor Trio, the world's greatest colored musicians; the Three Brown Buddies and the Three Dancing Habits; a sextet of dancing fools, and a great sepia chorus of Harlem's "Hot-Cha" Girls.

The engagement is for one week only and seats for the entire engagement are now on sale at the box office.

Community Center Repeats "Pinafore"

The Community Center Department will present the perennially popular operetta, "H. M. S. Pinafore," by W. S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan, at Central High School Auditorium, Thirteenth and Clifton streets northwest, Tuesday evening of this week, October 18, at 8:30 o'clock, with the cast of principals and chorus that was so successful last summer at the Sylvan Theater.

The pompous Sir Joseph Porter, K. C. B., first lord of the admiralty, will be played by Ira P. Meyer; Little Buttercup will be played by Maxine De Silvia; Capt. Corcoran, by Elliott Button; Josephine, the captain's lovely daughter, by Alma Harris; Dick Deadeye, by Harry Crowe; Ralph Backstraw, able seaman, by Raymond Baine; Hebe, by Virginia Weedon, and boatswain, by Harry Yelde.

The two acts will be laid on the quarterdeck of the H. M. S. Pinafore, at anchor in the harbor off Portsmouth, England. Miss Wentworth will direct the performance, at the piano.

"Pinafore."

American University's Dramatic Club, which recently organized by electing Carlton Skeggs, of Mount Airy, Md., as president, has begun work on its first production of the college year, a revival of Gilbert and Sullivan's ever-popular operetta, "Pinafore."

Arturo Toscanini, Musical Genius, a Season's Visitor

Arturo Toscanini, conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, is one of the few men the world has agreed to call a "genius." Much has been written and said in an attempt to analyze the secret of his greatness. The elements are obvious—the unplumbed musical knowledge, the fanatical devotion to work, the extraordinary power over others, the fantastic memory, the flaming spirit. In the end the mystery remains, the magic which has made two continents agree that here is the first conductor of the age.

Arturo Toscanini will conduct the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra when it comes to Washington on March 7.

Born in Parma, Italy, March 25, 1867, Toscanini was graduated from the conservatory of that city when he was 18, with a diploma for cello and composition. He leaped into fame one year later, when, as a member of the orchestra at the Rio de Janeiro Opera House, he substituted for the conductor at a moment's notice, conducted "Aida" from memory and from that day directed performances instead of taking part in them as a player.

From 1886 onward he has been a conductor whose fame has constantly grown. He became artistic director of the La Scala in 1898. In 1908 he came to the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, returning to his native land in 1913 to resume his work at the Milan opera. He first appeared as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic in 1926. He returned as guest conductor the next year, and since the season 1927-28 he has been a permanent director of that organization.

National Symphony Opens Full Season On Thursday Night

The first event of major importance in Washington's music season of 1932-33 takes place this week when the National Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Hans Kindler, plays its first concert of the year at Constitution Hall on Thursday at 8:30 p. m.

Many notables will be present at this concert, which marks the opening of the orchestra's second complete season. Gov. John Garland Pollard of Virginia has been invited to attend to hear the work, "Natchez on the Hill," composed by John Powell, famous pianist and native Virginian. It will be the first time this work has been played in Washington.

An impressive program has been arranged, including the following:

"Fourth Symphony" (Brahms).

"Natchez on the Hill" (John Powell).

Prelude to third act, "Die Meistersinger" (Wagner).

Prelude to first act, "Die Meistersinger" (Wagner).

The Bach, unusually rich and stirring, was especially orchestrated for this concert, and most successfully. These two movements from this great concerto give evidence of the orchestra's freedom and fullness of tone and the added richness of the various choirs of instruments, attained since this time one year ago when it embarked on its first season to the classic strains of Beethoven's Fifth, the traditional symphony for such ventures.

This year, a symphony demanding even greater musicianship both from players and conductor will be presented, in the great Brahms Fourth. Kindler conducted this work with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra two months ago, and it is interesting to note that the Philadelphia critics reviewed the performance of Washington's young conductor with such phrases as "admirable feeling for tempo" * * * "insistence on beautiful tone quality" * * * "deepened interpretative faculties" * * * "a triumph."

It is the first time that the National Symphony Orchestra has played a complete Brahms symphony. The Fourth Symphony was the last composed by Brahms, and critics generally agree that it is his greatest work for the orchestra.

"Natchez on the Hill" was first played by the National Symphony Orchestra at Richmond, Va., last year, as part of the Virginia State Music Festival, with John Powell, the composer, conducting. It is an unusual and colorful work, interestingly orchestrated and based on American folk tunes.

Thursday's concert is the first of 24 concerts, eight to be given on succeeding Thursdays, eight on Sundays and eight on Saturdays, at Central High School, for children and students.

COMING TO LOCAL STAGES

THE American Theater Society of Washington has another new production to offer theatergoers when on Monday evening, October 24, the New York Theater Guild presents John Howard Lawson's much talked of play, "The Pure in Heart." This production has the added distinction of being directed by Theresa Helburn. Miss Helburn, in her former capacity of executive director of the guild, has always supervised the direction of guild plays, but "The Pure in Heart" is the first guild production to bear the stamp "under the direction of Theresa Helburn."

Heading the distinguished cast are such well-known players as June Walker, Osgood Perkins, Paul Kelly, Helen Flint, Thurston Hall, Erskine Sanford, Eva Condon, Robert Fischer and others.

John Howard Lawson, the author, is best remembered for his expressionistic play, "Processional," and his more recent production, "Success Story," now creating a sensation in New York, though in "The Pure in Heart," he gets away from the expressionistic school principally because he finds this medium less suitable to the story he has to tell.

Half the action of the play takes place on the bare stage during the rehearsal of a new musical comedy. The incidental music has been written by a young Cornell graduate, Edmund Ziman. It is a story of backstage life shorn of sentimentality. You are introduced to a little stage-struck girl named Annabel Sparks and you follow her from the tenement house where in childlike fashion she pretends to be an actress right through to her landing a job in a Broadway show.

June Walker plays this role. Osgood Perkins is seen as ne'er do well doctor, one of the three backers of the musical show in which Annabel is to make her stage debut. There are three acts in the play, two scenes in each act. This second scene in each instance takes place on the "bare stage."

FOR the week beginning with a matinee performance on Sunday, October 23, the Gayety Theater announces a new Empire Burlesque Circuit attraction bearing the name of "Whirly Girlies."

This is reputed to be one of the circuit's representative offerings and has as its featured players Lillian Murray and Rosemond Maye. These alluring young women are handsomely supported by a large cast of comedians, singers and dancers, with a chorus background comprised of shapely young women.

The customary daily matinees will be given and the special nights will be observed thoughout the week, as usual.

Civic Opera.

The Washington Civic Opera Company begins activities announcing three productions and a possible fourth. "Iolanthe," the brilliant fairy opera of Gilbert and Sullivan will be the first presentation. This will be followed by "Martha," a comedy, and "Robin Hood." Many new voices will be heard with this artistic group that achieved an enviable reputation last season in the "Gondoliers" and the "Yeomen of the Guard."

Membership is opened to all opera aspirants and auditions for principal parts and chorus will be held Thursday, October 20, by appointment made through Maxine De Silvia, 1412 Chapin street northwest.

Club's First.

The dramatic group of the Arts Club of Washington, under the chairmanship of Miss Anne Ives, offer their first production of the season at the club house on the evenings of October 25 and 26. The play selected is Shaw's satirical drama "Fanny's First Play," produced in London for the first time at the Adelphi Theater in April, 1911. Miss Lilla La Garde will have the leading role of Fanny O'Dowda, the part originally created on Broadway by Irene Fenwick.

Miss La Garde will be supported by William S. Sepner, Robert Chase, J. Martin Scranage, Anne Ives, Edna Ellis Hilton, E. R. McKenzie.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

WASHINGTON joined with the rest of the musical world in celebrating the anniversary of Joseph Haydn, master composer, last week. The principal celebration was that under the auspices of the George Washington University, with the National Symphony Orchestra and Hans Kindler giving zest to the event.

Music lovers will welcome the first concert of the National Symphony Orchestra, as keen interest is felt in all done by Washington's own orchestra, and the opening concert should be a gala occasion. Judging from the reports of those who have been fortunate enough to hear some of the rehearsals, the orchestra is in splendid shape and shows every promise for a brilliant season.

The best results, of course, can only be obtained by the thorough cooperation of our citizens. On all sides expressions of this nature are to be heard, and the only thing remaining is to translate these expressions into actual deeds.

Local choirs are in full operation now and preparing for great festival services at Thanksgiving and Christmas. There appears to be a determination to make these occasions notable through the music as well as through churchly reasons.

The opening of the regular concert season in the near future is regarded also with special attention, judging from the good advance sales reported from the box offices. Outstanding stars are on the several programs and Washington music lovers will have the opportunity to hear all the leading stars of the moment in the concert world.

The Conservatory Preparatory School of Cleveland Park began its twelfth year October 1, enrolling in its grades children of prominent Cleveland Park families and others The director, G. W. Crist, is planning a repetition of the bicentennial program given in the spring, and other attractive musical affairs.

A program of songs and operatic arias will be presented by Catherine Toomey in her debut recital as a contralto at Barker Hall, tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock. The two operatic numbers which will open and close the program are very familiar. "Stride la Vampa" from Verdi's "Il Trovatore" is the opening selection. "Mon Coeur s'ouvre a ta voix" from Saint-Saens' "Samson et Delilah" closes the program.

The group of German lieder which follows the opening aria, includes three lovely and rarely heard songs by Franz Schubert. They are: "Die Kraehe," "Aufenthalt," and "Tod und das Madchen." "Die Lorelei" by Franz Liszt, will be sung in its original contralto key.

More modern art songs make up the third group. There will be Ottorino Rospighi's "Mists," Rachmaninoff's "Morning", Tschaikowsky's "None but the Lonely Heart," and Gabrilowitsch's "Farewell" in this group.

The group of songs in English opens with a very old song by Arne, "Polly Willis." It will be followed by Mrs. Beach's "Passers-by," Heyman's "Dorian Lullaby," Walter Kramer's "The King of China's Daughter" (first time in public in Washington), and the same composer's "Great Awakening." Mrs. Toomey is presented by H. Leroy Lewis, of this city. The accompanist will be Miss Starr Preston. Invitation cards can be had at the Lewis Studios, 1406 H street northwest.

The Women's Civic Club will have as its guest soloist at tea this afternoon Jessie Dunlop Werner, contralto, of Calvert Baptist Church Choir. Mrs. Werner formerly resided in Norfolk, Va., where she was soloist in the Epworth Methodist Church South for nine years, also the Freemason street Baptist Church of that city. Mrs. Werner's musical education was acquired under Mme. May Haymaker Henley, coloratura of the Theater Des Westens, Paris, and Oscar Saenger, of New York City.

Washington Alumnae Club, of the national honorary musical sorority, Mu Phi Epsilon, met last week at the home of Mrs. Helen F. Torrey, of Kanawha street northwest. Charlotte Klein and Inez B. Miller were the assisting hostesses. Plans were made for the Founder's Day Banquet, in which the active chapter, Rho Beta, is to join in the celebration.

Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore" will be offered by the Estelle Wentworth Opera Group Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock at Central High School auditorium, sponsored by the Community Center Department, in response to city-wide requests for its repetition indoors, following its successful presentation last August as one of the summer festival programs at the Sylvan Theater.

The well-trained chorus of local singers—thirty in number—appearing as jolly tars, and as Sir Joseph Porters' "sisters and his cousins and his aunts," will include a large number of the city's church soloists, and radio artists, all of whom are members of the Wenworth Opera Group, which just last week rendered such a good account of itself in the choral numbers of the Bicentennial Harvest Festival Pageant at the Washington Monument.

Such dearly loved numbers as "We Sail the Ocean Blue," "For He's an Englishman" and "Farewell My Own, Light of My Life, Farewell," will be sung by the full chorus; and the solo numbers that fall to the lot of Sir Joseph Porter, "Little Buttercup" and "Captain Cocoran," will be sung by Ira P. Meyer, Maxine De Silvia and Elliott Button, including Sir Joseph's "I am the Monarch of the Sea" and "When I Was a Lad" and "I'm Called Little Buttercup" and "Baby Farming," sung by Buttercup herself.

Miss Wentworth will stage and conduct the operetta, Harold Snyder will direct the lighting effects for "Pinafore."

The Rubinstein Club will hold its monthly rehearsal at the Willard Hotel Tuesday evening. A cordial invitation is extended to singers who desire to join the club. Mrs. Milton White, Georgia 2845, is audition chairman, Mrs. Adele Bush will again be club accompanist this season.

The National Capital Choir, directed by Dr. Albert Harned, will sing two anthems at the morning services today at the Universalist National Memorial Church, "Be Strong," by Robinson, and "God Sends the Night," by Rathbone. John M. Billings, organist, will play Bruno Huhn's "Cantilena in G" for the prelude, and "Festival March," by the same composer, as postlude.

The University Club of Washington announces that its first musical program of the year will take place on Thursday evening of this week at 8:30, when it will present a program headed by George O'Connor, and including as his accompanists Matt Horne, Evelyn Thomaides and George Wilson. Thomas W. Brahany will be master of ceremonies, with Jack Bowie, tenor; Bernard Fitzgerald, tenor; Anton Kaspar, violinist; Priska Kaspar, pianist; Mary O'Donoghue, soprano; Elizabeth Phillips, reader, and Edwin Steffe, barytone. This will be the first ladies night of the season.

The overture to the opera "Oberon," by Weber, seldom heard and even more rare as an organist's offering, will feature the program of Gene Stewart, organist of Waugh M. E. Church, in the first of his winter series of recitals, to be held Tuesday night at the church, Third and A streets northeast. In addition Mr. Stewart will offer compositions of Beethoven, Brahms, Bach and others more modern, whose compositions are less frequently appreciated as organ numbers. Kroom Bagranoff, last year's star of "The Gondoliers," who is to appear this winter with the Washington Civic Opera in "The Bohemian Girl," will assist on the program, offering as one of his numbers a song from the opera. The program will start promptly at 8:30 p. m.

The first fall meeting of the Washington Choral Festival Association was held in the Cosmos Club Tuesday, when Myron W. Whitney, president, presided. Those present were Clarence A. Aspinwall, Clarence Phelps Dodge, Miss Grace Dunham Guest, Mrs. Joseph M. Stoddard, vice presidents; Charles D. Boyer, treasurer; Mrs. Gertrude Lyons, secretary and assistant treasurer; Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe and Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, of the advisory committee, and Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra, and Louis A. Potter, conductor of the chorus.

It was unanimously voted to change the name of the organization to the Washington Choral Society. Plans for the coming season were taken up and it was decided to commence rehearsals at once on a work to be sung with the National Symphony Orchestra, Hans Kindler, conductor, in the near future.

Auditions and registrations will take place on Tuesday and Thursday in Barker Hall (Y. W. C. A. Building), Seventh and K streets, at 7 p. m., when membership cards will be issued. Registration fee, $2. The first rehearsal will be held October 25 in the Central Community Center (Eleventh and Clifton streets) at 7:30, when membership cards will admit the singers.

Rowac Club

The first formal meeting of the Rowac Club was held last Wednesday at the Sears, Roebuck Art Gallery, 1106 Connecticut avenue. After the luncheon, the meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Richard Thrush, and plans for the year were discussed. At the close of the meeting, pictures of the gallery were viewed by the club members.

Mrs. Edward H. Cavin, hostess, was assisted by Mrs. William Stimpson and Mrs. William DeKleine.

The sewing division of the club will meet Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Edward W. Marcellus, East Falls Church, Va.

16th Street Heights

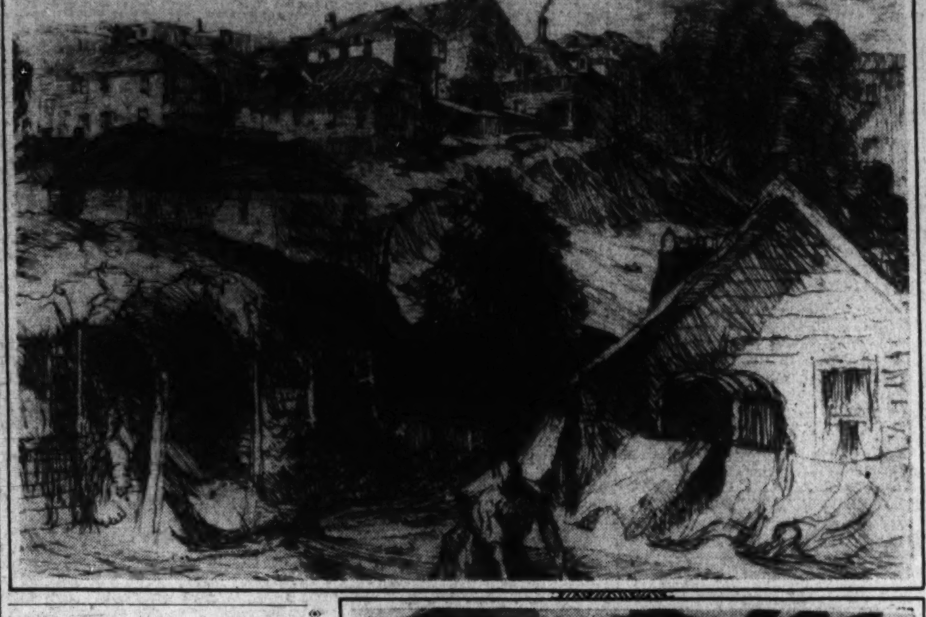
The Sixteenth Street Heights Club met on Tuesday at the home of Mrs. W. B. Wooden, College Heights, Md. An interesting book review was given by Mrs. J. W. Gongwer. Among the guests were Miss Van Tuyle, Mrs. Stowell, Mrs. Earhart, Mrs. W. H. Cheesman. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. G. A. Scott, 14 Denwood avenue, Takoma Park, Md.

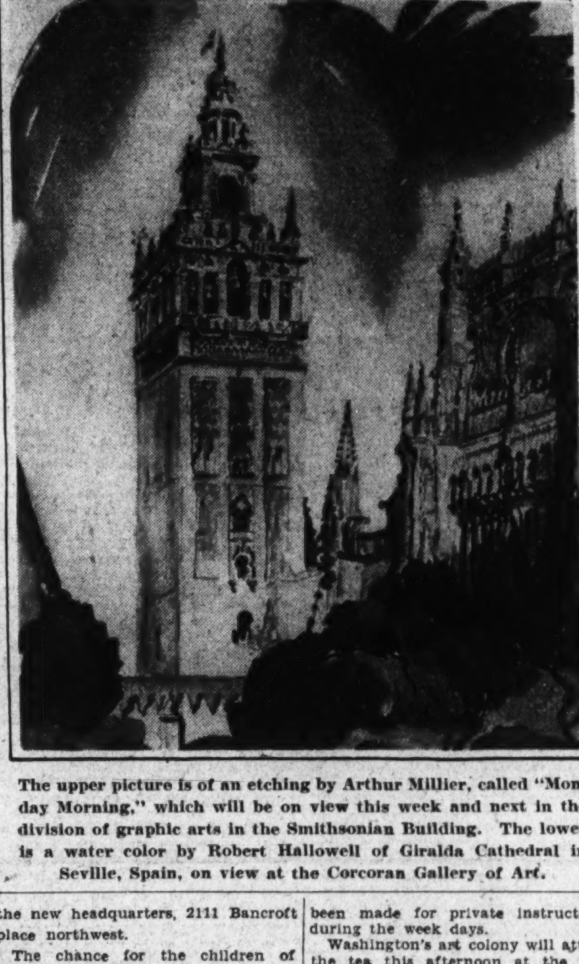
Lynx for Collars

Natural lynx has been revived to collar morning coats in several houses, among them Worth and Paquin, and the former house uses it very cleverly for a long separate boa and a muff. A little lynx tinted "blue" like natural fox has also been seen.

CAPITAL ART AND ARTISTS

By VYLLA POE WILSON





The upper picture is of an etching by Arthur Millier, called "Monday Morning," which will be on view this week and next in the division of graphic arts in the Smithsonian Building. The lower is a water color by Robert Hallowell of Giralda Cathedral in Seville, Spain, on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

MANY water colors of Robert Hallowell, American artist, on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, seem to transcend the realistic school and achieve sensitized truism. They present such an individual idea of artistic impressions that it is not possible to put them in any of the sterotype school of art. His work suggests a sympathy with the poet of symbolism, William Blake, who could see a world in a grain of sand or heaven in a wild flower.

There is a reason, no doubt, for the impression of high skyscrapers jumbled together, for he certainly gives us a new slant on material things of America. As we view his city scenes we are carried into the ringing, throbbing, seething, brooding centers of American business and industry. These city views form an important part of this collection. The iron and steel and stone and the myriad eyes of many windows are warmed by the elusive atmosphere the artist has managed to inject in them. The free use of gray tones, blend the color notes suggestive of tragedy, mirth, peace and sorrow, of rebellion, service, energy and charity which make up the color pot of our modern cities. The pictures are alive and yet reveal no straining for sensational effects.

These streets and buildings and bridges and buzzing street corners live. Yet this artist has not found it necessary to inject the human figure in them. But we envision a busy hurrying throng at the corners down deep in the channels of skyscraper-flanked streets he shows us, or traffic moving and rushing to serve the country and the world across his Brooklyn Bridge.

There is a versatility about this artist who paints with a firmer brush than customary in water colors. There is a charming lure about a camp site which does not show the camp site at all, but the view through the trees surrounding it of blue water beneath overhanging trees on a bank where any camper would like to take a twilight swim.

* * * *

THE two portraits in the collection are well worthy of mention, one a baby rather more impressionalized than in other pictures with the sleepy blue eyes sure to linger longest in the memory.

A modern man, intent on what he is reading, is a rare study in expression as he sits with his spectacles on his nose. What he reads the artist leaves entirely to the imagination, for only a few lines suggest a book or a paper or perhaps a newspaper. Anyway it engages his entire attention.

It is not a startling expression this man wear, it is not an angry or even a surprised one, but just a look of the intense interest, so the spectators would like to look over his shoulder to see what he is reading.

There is a triumphant note throughout the character of all these pictures which, however, always maintain their simplicity of style. There is a freedom but a sense of basic design.

The artist is a full birthright Quaker. In his youth he had his drawings published in a children's magazine and studied under Howard Pyle. After leaving Harvard University he contributed to Century Magazine. In 1914 he was one of the founders and publishers of the New Republic. During the war he was in the Treasury Department in Washington. He has studied in the art centers of Europe under the best masters and has had an enviable number of his pictures exhibited.

* * * *

THE fragility of Whistler and the strength and subtle expression of Rembrandt are evident in the collection of etchings by Arthur Millier on exhibition until October 30 in the division of graphic arts at the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. Millier who has often expressed himself as having an aversion to mannerisms has avoided the development of any marked style and there his work has a versatility which might suggest that he was always searching for fresh fields to conquer if these fields lead along the path beaten by the great of history in the world of etching.

He has a real knowledge as artist and critic of the work of the great masters of the art of etching. This knowledge and admiration creeps into his own work.

Human interest is apparent in all his work as though he strolled about and received his inspiration from the life of the city, everyday events and people which passed before his vision. When he has drifted out of the city he has seen the beauty in the rural homes and barns and many charming examples of these are seen in the collection.

Mr. Miller, who is the art critic of the Los Angeles Times, began his career as an etcher in San Francisco in 1920, where he made some notable etchings of street scenes. He was born in England in 1893 and came to California in 1908. He was in the Canadian army overseas for three years. He attended the California School of Fine Arts and won the scholarship of the Art Students League. He is represented in the permanent collections of the Art Institution of Chicago, Library of Congress print department; Los Angeles Museum and Los Angeles Public Library.

Another course of lectures will be on art, color, method, technique, drawing, composition and design as applied to painting. Criticism will be offered at regular meetings and the course will extend from early November throughout the winter.

* * * *

MUCH interest is expressed in the classes in fashion drawing conducted by Grace Almquist Sprague as part of the program of the Art League of Washington at the new headquarters, 2111 Bancroft place northwest.

The chance for the children of Washington who can not attend the regular art classes during the week on account of their school duties to receive comprehensive instruction at the Children's Art School of the Art League of Washington on Saturday morning has received much approval from parents and teachers of Washington children. Arrangements have been made for private instructions during the week days.

Washington's art colony will attend the tea this afternoon at the Arts Club of Washington which will mark the opening of the exhibition of Hugo Inden and Hildegarde Hamilton. Miss Anne F. Abbott and Miss Clara R. Saunders will be hostesses. Next Sunday the exhibitions to be opened during the tea will be those of J. C. Claghorn and Edith McCartney. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Claghorn will be hosts.

Mills Payne, State treasurer, and Mrs. Arturo Y. Casanova, State historian, also Past State Regent Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins and Miss Mabel Strider, of the National Geographic Society.

The history of the chapter was given by Miss Ella Purdy, charter member, a history of Louisa Adams, by Miss Agnes Arnold, and remarks were by Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, honorary member of the chapter, as it was during Mrs. Hodgkins' reign as State regent the chapter was formed. Also congratulations were extended to the chapter by the State regent and her officers. Music was furnished by Mrs. Myrtle Barnes and Miss Margaret Ringrose.

The hostesses presented a birthday cake with 25 lighted candles in gold, blue and silver decorations.

PRESIDENT MONROE CHAPTER.

The President Monroe Chapter held the first meeting of the season at the home of Miss Isabelle Parr in Chevy Chase. Miss Laura Ruff, who had visited Tamassee, the D. A. R. school in South Carolina, this summer, gave a description of the school. As the President Monroe Chapter maintains a scholarship in this school, its members were particularly glad to have Miss Ruff's first-hand account of its great merit.

The chapter voted to maintain the budget during the coming year, and to send a contribution to the fund for the District of Columbia D. A. R. reception to the president general, Mrs. Russell William Magna.

After the business meeting a social reunion after the summer was greatly enjoyed around Miss Parr's lovely table which was candle-lighted and adorned with a great silver bowl of pink and white dahlias.

DEBORAH KNAPP CHAPTER.

Deborah Knapp Chapter held its first meeting of the season at the home of the regent, Mrs. Robert M. Ferguson, 1616 Sixteenth street. Committee reports were given by Mrs. Carl C. Brown, State chairman of conservation and thrift, and Mrs. Ferguson of chapter house.

Winston Holt addressed the chapter, outlining the new policy of the national defense committee. She referred to the recent developments as to attempts of certain foreign agents to disturb peace and prosperity in America, and stressing the importance of the different chapters of the District in giving the subject very careful consideration, also the necessity of familiarizing the minds of the country with a better knowledge of the Constitution of the United States.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

"Make this a Christmas of Books" is a slogan one hears on many sides nowadays. There is much sound judgment behind this movement because a book is a gift that can be inexpensive and at the same time enduring and will bring enjoyment the year around.

In selecting Christmas gift books it will be found that the old classics will bring hearty thanks from the recipients as well as the most recent best sellers. Parents with children will do well to stock up their book shelves with the standard classics first. While many of the new children's books are truly entertaining and well written and illustrated, yet the foundation of literature must be laid in childish minds by the reading of these old favorites whose charm but increases from generation to generation.

What is true for young people contains a real suggestion for book gifts to adults as well. We have learned to place too much dependence on "new books." Whether a book has been published in the last 12 months or 500 years ago matters little. It is what is between its covers that really counts.

Biography is holding its own in the new book season not only in this country but in Europe as well. The early announcements of London publishers contain a host of biographies written by distinguished personages as well as about them. There is a rumor current there that former King Alfonso of Spain is hard at work on his memoirs, a rather daring act when his removal from the throne is of such recent date. Hilaire Belloc has chosen "Napoleon" as the subject of his new book, a subject of which the world never seems to tire. Perhaps the most important biography forecast for this season is that of "Joseph Chamberlain," to be written by J. L. Garland. There is much fascination for the average American in the life of this great Englishman, so it is to be expected that the book will have a large sale in this country as well as in England.

In gracious tribute to a great man of another, and lately an enemy, nation, the literary world of France is showering its encomiums on Goethe, whose centenary is being celebrated this year. This special interest may be accounted for, in part, by the prevailing belief that Goethe throws an intellectual bridge between the two countries.

To exhaust the first printing of a new book, by the way, the first day it is released for distribution, is the novel record won by Pearl S. Buck in "Sons," published by John Day Co. And this first printing was one of 50,000 copies.

A Melville essay contest has been announced by the Aventine Press, of New York, on the title, "The Place of Herman Melville in American Literature."

The essays on this subject should not be more than 5,000 words long. The first prize is $100 and the contest is open until January 1, 1933.

To refer back to European biographies once more, Europe is agog over the ultrafrank memoirs of Princess Fugger, entitled "The Glory of the Hapsburgs." (Dial Press, New York.)

The princess spares no one in her remarks, but neither does she draw on her own imagination for her theories. She knew all the royal great of yesterday, and they are fascinating glimpses she gives us of them in her thick book, profusely illustrated with photographs of those of whom she has written.

In "Hoover and His Times," by Edwin Emerson (Garden City Publishing Co., New York), this writer has done real service to the President in bringing out his book at this opportune moment. For it answers many of the questions people have been asking about the life of the President and it also describes his action against the background of the times.

He finds a product of heredity and of his times in Herbert Hoover. "But," he continues, "Herbert Hoover—like all of us in this modern world—is more than a mere offspring. He is an exemplar of his age, not floating gently down a quiet stream, but tossed about in a whirlpool of life currents, where steering is hard and sudden gusts lash the spray."

Among the constructive things listed as having been achieved during the administration of President Hoover, Mr. Emerson lists the Folger Library in Washington, America's Shakespeare Library.

Many of the campaign stories are refuted in Mr. Emerson's book. He explains in great detail Mr. Hoover's mining ventures in many lands. His war service and relief work are also told in extenso. Altogether the book should prove a handy volume of accurate reference to those interested in reelecting Mr. Hoover as President on the 8th of next November.

One of the most interesting parts of the book is "The Appendix," dealing with the President's forbears. It is shown there that he is a lineal descendant of five generations of Quaker ancestors who tilled the virgin soil in six successive colonies of the North American continent.

The book is illustrated with contemporary cartoons which add to its historical value.

In addition to the actions of President Hoover the book gives a vivid record of our times since the Great War, a fact which enriches it also.

In these selected stories and editorials by one of America's outstanding newspapermen a clear record of the year of turmoil and anxiety just ending is discerned.

In this volume runs the history of universal depression which has encircled the globe. Desperate measures, Mr. Lippman evidently believed from the editorials, were necessary to stay the tide of political and financial upheaval in Germany. He writes of the fall of the gold standard in Great Britain, which caused such a debacle not only in England, but half of Europe. President Hoover's struggle with problems unprecedented in the history of the country comes in for Mr. Lippman's editorial comment. He writes with an unsheathed pen of the problems of nearly 10,000,000 unemployed in the United States.

In these selections from the writings of Mr. Lippman, it is possible to glean a series of basic ideas on the world problems and the best means of repairing the shattered economic fabric of the world which are a unique contribution to present day thought.

APPRECIATION. By William Lyon Phelps. (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.)

"As I descend deeper into the vale of years, it becomes increasingly clear to me that I am a happier man not only than the average, but happier than many of those who are younger, healthier, stronger and richer than I."

Thus does this philosopher begin his analysis of the appreciative attitude toward life. This essay is of a much more personal character than many of those by this author and is sure to be eagerly read by his followers. It gives a frank statement of his own principles of living as author and teacher and critic. It is altogether an intimate, vivacious and inspiring volume.

PIUS XI—By Denis Gwynn (The Holme Press, London).

This book, which is one of the series of the "Makers of the Modern Age," edited by Osbert Burdett, gives us a faithfully conscientious study of the man who heads the Roman Catholic Church today and the events and circumstances which have influence in his office.

In making this study Mr. Gwynn has been able to draw upon many private sources of information through his connection with Catholic journalism and upon his close acquaintance with the Catholic newspapers of various countries since the war.

The present volume is the first study of the man offered to the general reader, in which is sketched the career of one known only as a learned librarian and a keen Alpinist, who late in life was called away to become Nuncio in Poland and who had hardly been installed on his return as archbishop and cardinal at Milan when he was elected Pope.

His encyclicals, the editor of this volume points out, have been chiefly devoted to a reconstruction of Christian society in peace, by Christian education, Chrisitan marriage and Christian social reform.

The entire book is written on the main theme which fits this man and Pope so well. "With the assistance of divine grace, the destiny of the human family lies in our hands."

EAST OF EDEN. By Isa Glenn (Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York).

This story of the literary personalities of New York of the last decade will be of general interest not only for the really good theme of the story, but because people like to read about things and characters with which they have some acquaintance or knowledge.

We have two kinds of New Yorkers, the kind which steps out of character to do something different and the conservative kind with standards and ideals which might do for a conservative class of the cities of the Old World.

Anyway, lovely Eva Litchfield steps out of her character and writes books which London critics declare might have been written by an ugly woman.

Pitted against her in the book is Nicholas van Suydam, an old New Yorker, of talent. He offers his wife the daily tribute of adoration, but is both professionally and masculinely jealous of her literary reputation.

McGoofey's First Reader

By H. I. PHILLIPS

THIS is John.
John has a gun.
John also has a funny hat.
He has a dog, too.
What kind of a dog has John?
John has a bird dog.
Where is John going?
He is going hunting.
Hunting for what?
John is not particular. He will take anything.
But will John get anything?
Oh, yes, indeedy.
What will he get?
John will get a farmhand, a cow or a stray pedestrian or something.
What does John want with a farmhand or a cow?
Nothing. It will all be accidental.
Can not John shoot straight?
John can shoot straight in rifle ranges and shooting galleries, but when he gets into the woods the ability leaves him.
Are the deer and the partridge, the quail and the grouse, the rabbit and the duck safe when John is in the woods hunting?
They are never safer.
Does John never get discouraged?
Never.
How do you explain it?
We don't.

THE STORY OF ROBERT.

ROBERT was a sloppy child.

Even as an infant he never looked right.

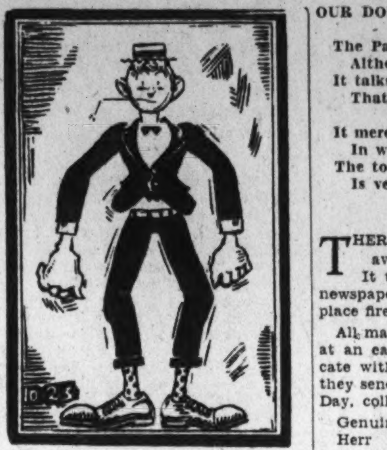
And when he grew to school age he was one of those boys who always appear to be wearing their big brother's old clothes.

Give him a pair of patched pants, a torn shirt and some old shoes and he was happy and comfortable.

His nickname was "Rags."

As he grew older he didn't change much and his unconcern about his personal appearance was neighborhood talk.

If he had ever appeared in a suit that fitted him it would have caused a sensation.



He had no idea for color and was the sort of youth who would wear a yellow tie with a light blue suit.

He liked to go around all dressed up but without any socks.

His vest was always too short and he wore hats that were too small for him.

Robert dressed in such a way that he would have been a swell addition to a costume ball.

He was pretty much of a mess and the folks despaired of him.

But he disappeared from home one day.

Years later they heard from him in the Big City.

He had attained world prominence and a princely income.

It seems he had become an authority on correct dressing, a writer of books on "What the Well Dressed Man Should Wear," and an international style arbiter.

Moral—It's a cockeyed world at best.

OUR DOMESTIC PETS—No. 32, THE PARROT.

The Parrot is a noisy bird;
Although it can not sing,
It talks an awful lot of stuff
That doesn't mean a thing.

It merely imitates human folks
In what they say, and so
The total worth of what it says
Is very, very low.

Culbertson on Bridge

By ELY CULBERTSON

FOR a number of years I have regarded the existing circumstances in Contract Bridge tournament play as deplorable. So-called "national tournaments" have been conducted to include only three or four cities in the country, and a great mass of Bridge players throughout the country have been kept in the background with no opportunity of testing their worth. It was with this thought in mind that I organized the United States Bridge Association.

Even now, when the Association is still in its infancy, order is being brought out of chaos. Thousands of players representing every State in the Union have joined the Association and every day more and more memberships are being accepted. It is the purpose of the Association to arrange tournaments in such a way that they really will be national events instead of local as they have been in the past. The State tournaments which will be held this year and next will determine the qualifiers for the sectional tournaments, and these sectional tournaments, of which there will be eight, will determine the qualifiers for the nationals. To insure that the national will not be a national in name only, the United States Bridge Association will even pay the expenses of the winners to and from the place where it is played.

* * * *

Recently I have been deluged with letters on two topics. These topics seem to be bothering more Bridge players than any others that have ever come up in the past. The first of these refers to the increased requirements for vulnerable one notrump bids. The fact that these requirements have been increased to 4 honor-tricks has apparently altered the dealing conditions to such an extent that everybody now holds hands consisting of:

♠ A K x
♡ A J x
♢ K x x
♣ x x x x

This hand is just short of 4 honor-tricks and consequently can not open with a notrump when vulnerable. Unfortunately, it does not contain any semblance of a shaded biddable suit either. Of course, the technically correct bid on this hand is a pass. Hundreds of players who have held this hand, or one very similar to it, in the last month or so have complained that they may be passing out a game. They have apparently failed to grasp the corollary to the theory, which is that one's partner should allow for the possibility of such a hand having been passed and should open the bidding, Third or Fourth Hand, with only slightly over 2½ honor-tricks, provided the hand contains some fair biddable suit. If no biddable suit is held by partner, it is almost impossible to visualize a game in the combined hands, and it is extremely likely that if the bidding had been opened the result would have been a penalty. Hands of 4-3-3-3 distribution are abominable things anyway and, unless faced by some sort of distributional strength, are usually the type of hands which are set at whatever contract they reach.

Of course it is impossible for me to believe that a hand such as the one given above is actually a frequent occurrence. Almost always a hand which falls short of the 4 honor-trick count contains some suit which can be bid, since even A x x x or Q 10 x x are considered as shaded bids when vulnerable and when unable to open with notrump. The chances of a game being missed by a forced pass are too infinitesimal to consider seriously.

The second point which is troubling a great many people involves the question of when to raise a major suit in preference to showing another minor suit. The answer to this is extremely simple, and I hope that this article will tend to clear up the confusion which apparently exists in the minds of many people at the present time. When only a single Raise for partner is held and the hand also contains an outside biddable suit, the biddable suit should be shown almost invariably. This will allow partner some leeway, will give him a picture of the distribution of the hand when the Raise for his first bid is given later, and finally may be the only road to a notrump contract where game in the major is impossible.

Where the hand contains sufficient playing-tricks to justify a double Raise, however, the preference should be given to this bid, and it is usually not advisable to show the other suit. The reason for this is that with a double Raise the path to game is more clearly defined and any minimum Takeout runs the risk of a pass by partner.

There is one exception to this last theory, and this occurs when a hand is strong enough to justify a Forcing Takeout. Here the preference should be given to this last bid, as then there is no danger of the hand dying short of game and the response received may be the important clue which will determine whether or not the hand should play at a Slam.

* * * *

The squeeze is a play which probably comes up more often than any other so-called "advanced" plays. Usually it occurs in situations where its success results in an additional 50 point or in a saving of 50 points where the hand has been overbid. The following hand was played very nicely by the Declarer, but his only satisfaction in manipulating the squeeze was that he was defeated only 1 trick instead of 2. The hand illustrates an unusual type of squeeze and I am recording it only for this reason.

South—Dealer.

North:
♠ 10 8 5
♡ 8 7 4
♢ A 7 5 4
♣ K Q 3

West:
♠ 4
♡ Q J 10 9 2
♢ J 9 8 6
♣ 8 7 5

East:
♠ A Q J 9 7 3 2
♡ K
♢ Q 10
♣ J 10 2

South:
♠ K 6
♡ A 6 5 3
♣ A 9 6 4

With East and West 60 on score, South opened the bidding with one club; West passed, North bid one notrump, East bid two spades, South passed, West passed, and North bid three clubs. This was the final declaration and the singleton spade was opened. The Ace, of course, won the trick, and the suit was returned, Declarer's King being ruffed by West. West now laid down the heart Queen and when East played the King, South won the trick with the Ace. The outlook was not particularly hopeful and Declarer felt that he was certain to go down 2 tricks. A count on the hand, however, gave him the clue which enabled him to save a trick. Three rounds of clubs disclosed the fact that East held three of that suit. He had already shown up with seven spades and one heart, so the chances were greatly in favor of his holding two diamonds. Declarer therefore led a low diamond and passed the trick around to East, hoping that this player would now proceed to squeeze his partner. East was a very canny defensive player, however, and after taking one spade, which the Declarer, of course, refused to trump, he now shifted to the diamond Queen. This did no good, however, for the Declarer won with the King and led out his last trump. West was forced to come down either to one diamond and two hearts, in which case the two diamonds in the Dummy were good, or two diamonds and one heart, in which case the Declarer would discard the diamond in Dummy and win the last trick with the heart 8. It was unfortunate that such a delicate squeeze resulted in such a small victory in points.

SOLUTION OF LAST WEEK'S PROBLEM.

Tricks 2 to 5. And East can make only the best trump and heart King. If North makes the mistake of playing club 8 at trick 1, East discards diamond 6, and, if the club is continued discards diamond 10 (refusing to trump). Since North now has the lead, East must win the last three tricks.

THIS WEEK'S PROBLEM.

Each Sunday I will prepare a problem in end-play. In this week's problem, which is Number 9 of the series, hearts are trump, and it is South's lead. North and South are to win four out of the five remaining tricks against any possible defense. The answer will be given next Sunday.

About the Chess Table

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER

For the first time in our memory there is an international master tournament in progress in Mexico which is being contested at the Press Social Center under the auspices of the Club de Ajedrez, of Mexico City. With the exception of World Champion Alexander Alekhine and Isaac Kashdan, of New York, the contestants are for the most part Mexicans. J. J. Araiza, Mexican champion who has competed in a number of international events in Europe, is listed among the entrants. Others are Capt. J. Vazquez, M. Avecedo, champion of San Lois Potosi; J. Medina, champion of Zacatecas; Dr. A. Asiain, of Mexico City; Col. M. Soto Larrea, J. Gonzales and W. Brunner. At the conclusion of the third round Alekhine was leading with a score of 3 to 0. Kashdan occupied second place in the standing and was much extended to win a 67-move partie with Dr. Asiain. The latter was tied with Araiza for third honors. Next week we hope to be able to present some of the games of the tourney.

Alekhine Defeated.

On the occasion of a recent simultaneous exhibition at Basil, World Champion Alekhine was neatly outplayed by H. Steinacher and forced to bow in defeat. The victory is unusual for simultaneous play, since the champion made no obvious oversights, while his opponent played forcefully to victory. The score of the game, with annotations by Brian Harley, of the London Observer, is appended. We are indebted to Dr. S. S. Scrivener for the score.

(a) Unusual and probably inferior at this stage.

(b) This is the normal process, and a K side attack should follow.

(c) P—KR4 is usual, waiting for P—B5, before playing B—B5. White, however, stands well enough with the text.

(d) I see no reason for this move.

(e) Bright play, which upsets the champion.

(f) Needless intricacy. He should play K x B R—Kt1, 19. B x Kt R x Q ch, 20. P x R, with overvalue for the Q and a safe position.

(g) The alternative Kt—Q4 allows B—K5 ch, 21. K—R1 (K—B1 P x Kt ch) P x KKt winning; for 22. P x P is pretty well forced, and there follows Q x QP ch, 23. R x Q B x R ch, 24. Q—Kt2 B x Q ch, coming out the exchange up.

(i) He finishes in Alekhine's own style: 28 K x R Q—QB7 ch, 29. K—Kt4 B—B1 ch, 30. K—R5 Q—R7 mate.

Some time back members of the Manhattan Chess Club, of New York City, found the appended problem a real test of their solving abilities. It should therefore prove of unusual interest to The Post's solvers, and we have every confidence in their ability to conquer it.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE

"LIBRA."

IF October 16 is your birthday the best hours for you on this date are from 7 a. m. to 9 a. m., from 12:30 p. m. to 1:30 p. m. and from 7:30 p. m. to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 10 a. m. to 11 a. m. and from 4:30 p. m. to 5:30 p. m.

Actions on October 16 will be impulsive rather than motivated by common sense and sound reasoning. This does not necessarily mean that the ensuing consequences will be bad, for the planets are so placed in the heavens as to be conducive to success in most enterprises. Restraint, however, is the order of the day.

Children born on this October 16 will be active and energetic. They will be kind and gentle, eager for knowledge and willing listeners rather than talkers. They will know instinctively the difference between right and wrong and will act accordingly. They crave affection, and care must be taken not to coddle them.

If you were born on October 16, yours will be an interesting life, possibly culminating in great success. Your talents are many, but you must stir yourself out of your dreams and put them to work for you. You are extremely just and a natural arbitrator, qualities so in demand in those on the bench. You have the honesty, integrity and foresight that would seem to fit you for a career in banking. The tact, good judgment and social graces that would make of you a diplomat are yours. You have the love of beauty and the desire and ability to create that would make of you an architect or an engineer.

Your greatest difficulty in life, and one which you must overcome, is an extremely sensitive disposition. You allow yourself to be too easily upset by the crudities of a material existence such as you must of necessity take part in. Hand in hand with this is a lack of confidence in yourself and a sense of frustration, both of them brought about by your probable difficulty in bringing into proper balance your artistic and creative nature and the demands of a cruelly practical world.

Both men and women born on October 16 will make splendid marital mates, and the chances for happiness in marriage greatly favors them. They make splendid parents and are devoted to their children.

Successful people born on October 16:

Alfred L. Loomis, physician.
William R. Shafter, soldier.
William H. Pancoast, surgeon.
Augustine Jones, educator.
Russell Sturgis, architect.
Horace E. Scudder, author and editor.

Attorney Detects Counterfeits.

Knoxville, Tenn. (U.P.).—Counterfeit coins don't get by Assistant U. S. District Attorney Jack Doughty. He bought a soft drink in a drug store recently and gave the counterman a dime. The latter flipped a nickel back, and as it struck the counter, Doughty exclaimed: "It's a counterfeit." Examination proved him correct.

Radio Dial Flashes

By ROBERT D. HEINL

MRS. HERBERT HOOVER did not allow the experience which she had in attempting to broadcast an address before the Girl Scouts of America, meeting in Virginia Beach, Va., recently, to shake her faith in radio. Instead she returned to the microphone on Thursday night, speaking over both networks, and this time the broadcast was a complete success.

Mechanical difficulties with the Virginia Beach hookup caused the failure of the first attempt. Mrs. Hoover began to speak at 8:45 p. m., but her speech did not register during the seven minutes she was on the air, and the program was then dropped entirely. Apologies were made over the air from New York.

The next day an official of the broadcasting chain called at the White House to apologize for the nonsuccess of the program. A new time was offered Mrs. Hoover and she accepted.

It might easily be said that radio seems to bear a grudge toward Mrs. Hoover. The Virginia Beach mishap was really her second. When she spoke from a tent at Camp Rapidan two or three years ago, primarily addressing the 4-H Club boys and girls then meeting in Washington, there was trouble with the lines until the last minute, due to a severe rain and wind storm.

There was no time for an introduction when the lines had been repaired. Mrs. Hoover just started to speak. Having gone through several minutes of uncertainty just previous to going on the air, Mrs. Hoover, who might have been unnerved, made one of her best radio addresses.

It is hard for the broadcasting company to reconcile itself to this last breakdown, since the failure of a national broadcast circuit is very rare these days. Therefore the broadcasters were much chagrined that it had to happen to Mrs. Hoover.

MRS. BERTHA E. BAUR, Republican national committeewoman from Illinois visits Washington frequently, but one afternoon last week her voice came instead. Mrs. Baur, who is a first-class speaker, was heard from Chicago.

Which is a reminder that both political parties are not overlooking the opportunity this campaign of putting on some bang-up daytime programs for the benefit of the women voters. President Hoover has already addressed them and Gov. Roosevelt will do so.

In the last presidential campaign the value of the daylight hours—the opportunity to reach the woman in the home—had not been fully realized, but this year both the Republicans and the Democrats are making up for lost time.

Wise political candidates are making early reservations for time on broadcasting stations before election day, so as to have facilities for killing off whispering campaigns and eleventh hour political canards.

These things are purposely sprung late in hopes that there will not be time for a newspaper correction. The radio stations have been found very effective for this purpose in past elections.

The Radio Commission is already receiving requests from stations for permission to extend time of their broadcasting hours in order to announce election returns. One of the first stations heard from seeking authority to operate additional time on election night was Station KGU, of Honolulu.

THAT there is too much jazz over local stations during the early evening hours is a complaint which comes to this column. The person complaining, as are doubtless many others, is unable to listen later at night and seeks programs more to her taste.

It might be explained that radio stations are at the mercy of commercial sponsors or the New York key stations in this matter. As long as these advertisers or stations continue to believe this is the type of program the majority prefers the radio audiences will continue to be surfeited with jazz and ordinary music, not only in the early evening but at all hours.

RADIO salaries—if the quotations given are to be believed and are not in stage money—continued to dazzle ordinary mortals. Ed Wynn, who is to be with us in person this week at the National, is reported to have renewed for 26 more weeks of radio performances at $5,000 per broadcast. Al Jolson, soon to go on the air again, is quoted at the same figure.

Amos and Andy, $7,500 week; Mildred Bailey, $2,500; Ben Bernie and band, $6,500; Boswell Sisters, $3,000; Cab Calloway and band, $5,000; Camel Quarter Hour, $8,500; Russ Columbo, $2,000; Bing Crosby, $3,000; Morton Downey, $4,500; Gene and Glenn, $5,000.

Roger W. Kahn orchestra, $2,250; Guy Lombardo band, $6,000; Vincent Lopez band, $4,000; Mills Brothers, $3,500; Jack Pearl, $3,500; the Revelers, $3,500; Harry Richman, $5,000; Sanderson and Crummit, $3,500; Kate Smith, $7,500; Paul Whiteman band, $8,500, and Eddie Cantor, $2,500 on a long time contract.

PRESIDENT HOOVER will inaugurate a series of Nation-wide radio programs for the welfare and relief mobilization of 1932 over the NBC and CBS networks today.

Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, who is chairman of the mobilization committee, also will speak during the broadcast, explaining the work of the organization, which is urging contributions for established welfare and relief groups, community chests and local emergency relief committees.

Walter S. Gifford, who last year was chairman of the President's organization for unemployment relief, will introduce both President Hoover and Mr. Baker.

The first program of the weekly series will be broadcast at 6:30 p. m. today. On subsequent Sundays the periods will start at 10:30 p. m. The Marine Band will furnish the musical portion of the first broadcast.

The Vivaldi-Bach Concerto in A Minor for four pianos and orchestra will be featured in its American premiere over the air during the broadcast by the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra (WMAL, 3 p. m.; WABC, 4 p. m.). When this work, a composition by the Venetian violinist-composer, Vivaldi, arranged and amplified by Bach, was performed in Berlin last year, the reception was so enthusiastic that the Berlin Philharmonic broke a precedent of long standing and gave a full encore.

Soloists at the four pianos will be Madeleine Marshall, Zoltan Kurthy, Maria Carreras and Frank Sheridan. All four virtuosi are well known to New York concert audiences for their work at the Lewisohn Stadium and with the Philharmonic.

THE morning period of the Church of the Air, to be broadcast over WMAL at 10 o'clock, will be a Lutheran service originating in Philadelphia, during the 1932 convention of the United Lutheran Church of America, now being held there.

The service will be conducted by the Rev. E. P. Pfatteicher, who will deliver a sermon on "The Economic Order as an Added Increment."

The Church of the Air's afternoon period will be a Roman Catholic half-hour, to be broadcast at 1:30 o'clock, from the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception, Albany, N. Y. The period will be a part of the annual Catholic Education Demonstration program, under the auspices of the Albany Diocese Schools. In addition to the sermon, which will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Kieran P. Moran, C.M., of St. Vincent's Seminary, Germantown, Pa., an address will be given by the Most Rev. Edmund F. Gibbons, Bishop of Albany. The broadcast will open with the hymn "Ave Maria," sung by the Diocesan Priests' Choir, under the direction of the Rev. John J. Gaffigan, and close with the Litany of Our Lord's Passion, sung by a student chorus of 700 voices.

America will hear the voice of Warwick Deeping, English novelist, in a transatlantic broadcast in which the writer will give some unusual impressions of the world-wide depression (WRC, 4:30 p. m.).

Showing how closely and accurately radio skits, though humorous and apparently burlesqued, frequently have their inspiration in actual events was an announcement yesterday from the Federal Trade Commission. It came at a time when the listening public has been following the matrimonial agency venture of Andy in "Amos 'n' Andy."

The trade commission announcement read:

"Shuford M. Futch, Jacksonville, Fla., advertiser of lists of names of persons seeking correspondence, commonly called a matrimonial agency, admitted that representations heretofore made were misleading and agreed to stop making such assertions.

"Specifically, he agreed to cease representing that the respondent can procure a 'sweetheart' for prospective subscribers, and that the respondent is a woman. Futch agrees to stop using the name 'Eva Moore' as a trade name or using any name that would imply that he is a woman."

EUNICE, with the aid of her "Dad," will look at The Post funnies very fully before the WRC microphone at 8:45 a. m. Tune in and hear their comments.

De Wolf Hopper will again turn his talents to the microphone and portray the role of Davey Crockett in the "Roses and Drums" episode (WMAL, 5 p. m.). This chapter of the radio saga of the American home will have its setting in San Antonio, during the battle of the Alamo.

What happens when John, a nerve-wracked husband, takes his wife, Sue, to a remote South Sea island in search of peace and quiet will form the climax of Big Ben Dream Drama over WRC at 5:30 p. m. Fortunately John awakens just as he and Sue are hopelessly involved with a tribe of cannibals.

How "Sir" Harry Jellinghouse, who finds something funny about even such a disaster as a shipwreck, proves a friend to Jerry Burnet, the American beachcomber, and his cockney pal, "Shrimp," will be learned during the Beachcomber episode (WRC, 9:45 o'clock) tonight.

Dad's "Word Song" over WOL at 10 o'clock this morning will have reference to the recent Jewish holidays and to the Eighth Street Temple. Solos by John Henry Marville, the bass soloist in the synagogue, will be featured.

BURNS and Allen work behind a screen in their studio because they prefer to concentrate on the microphone.

Jay C. Flippen and John Kelvin always wear their hats while on the air. John often removes his coat and vest and loosens his collar, but he refuses to dispense with the hat.

H. V. Kaltenborn never reads from script, but ad-libs with the aid of scanty topical notes.

Ben Alley continually adjusts his tie and cuffs while singing.

Star Feminine Speakers Join Thick of Fight

Mrs. Gann Is Headliner Among Republican Vote Seekers.

(Associated Press.)

For a women's vote, much desired but hard to predict, both major parties in the presidential campaign are bidding with their star feminine stump-speakers.

The Republicans, with Dolly Gann among the headliners, rely on an array that includes Rita Child Dorr, economic expert; Helen Varrick Boswell, whose political experience dates back to presuffrage days; Laura Ingalls, aviatrix; Florence Nash, actress, and Mrs. John W. Garrett, diplomat's wife.

They are proclaiming Herbert Hoover, "the same humanitarian who won the woman ballots in 1928."

The Democrats, through Nellie Tayloe Ross, Ruth Bryan Owen, Emily Newell Blair and others, are pointing to the Democratic claims made for Roosevelt in the field of welfare work.

Mrs. Sabin Aids Democrats.

The Democratic campaign is being made more colorful by such national figures as Mrs. Charles Sabin, organizer of women antiprohibitionists, who speaks on the wet plank only; Labor Leader Julia O'Connor Parker, who participated in the Boston telephone strike; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Washington hostess; Representative Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr.

Mrs. Boswell, in charge of the Republican Women's Bureau of Speakers, recalled the campaign of 1900 in which her speeches, so few were the women in action, created much comment.

She said that the depression has brought women actively and vitally into today's politics.

She named Mrs. Garrett, wife of the Ambassador to Italy, willing to leave her luxurious Baltimore home for the rigors of campaigning; Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, widow of the President, and Mrs. Ogden Mills, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, and Florence Nash, the actress, a volunteer who never before this year made a political speech.

Mrs. Gann Leads Republicans.

She reported Dolly Gann first among the Republican women in "audience interest," and Representative Ruth Baker Pratt, of New York, next in demand, but available for only a few speeches because of her own campaign.

Very active also has been Mrs. George Wyeth, new president of the National Women's Republican Club, and wife of the cancer specialist.

Owning and flying her own plane, Miss Ingalls has volunteered to trailblaze for Republican women speakers.

Isabel Rhees Kappeyne, just back from Holland, was reported active among club women. Mrs. Edward T. Herbert was described as particularly effective among "southern-born women in the north." Mrs. Charles E. Gregory is listed as an able creator of pithy paragraphs for women speakers.

On the Democratic side, Mrs. Ross, former Governor of Wyoming, the Democratic party's vice chairman, is considered by her colleagues "a fact-handler, perhaps more than any other woman speaker."

Floridian Uses Plane.

Representative Owen of Florida, daughter of the late William Jennings Bryan, travels by plane to make many of her speeches, which Democratic friends regard as bearing the stamp of the Commoner's oratorical ability.

Diminutive, brown-eyed Mrs. Blair, of Missouri, is fond of saying women should not be content to follow the pattern of men in politics. Her advice has been sought by women groups eager for her "specialized slant."

Yet there's really no figuring whose votes these women will win.

Men are asking to hear Dolly Gann. And a woman in Democratic headquarters said that when arguments from men had failed, Ruth Bryan Owen, in a radio speech, won her husband to Roosevelt.

Women Join To Get Out Vote Nov. 8

Great Ambition Now Is to Obtain Recognition in President's Cabinet.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

In the last few weeks before election day, November 8, the women of the United States have joined hands, no matter what political party they belong to, to get out the woman vote in order to show that the woman's part in the body politic is of sufficient weight to justify the demands of many groups of women for real recognition of women in government. No matter which political party is in power for the next four years, they will have to deal with the insistent demand that women be given an equal chance in the direction of the ship of state as men. Provided, of course, that women can prove that among thier number are those who can properly dispatch the duties of the positions they seek.

More and more during the last few years, and still more during the last month, has there been a decided determination on the part of the women groups to place some one of their number in a Cabinet position. Many of them are not satisfied with the suggestion of an assistant Cabinet office. They point out that in the 33 nations now having woman suffrage in the world few are as backward as the United States in giving real recognition by appointing them to high office as is this country. In both political parties the advocates of rights for women point out there are women who could fill any of the high executive posts.

The voteless women of the District of Columbia, under the leadership of the National League of Women Voters, are planning to draw attention to the voteless state of the women and men of the District of Columbia election day by holding teas and meetings in Washington while the women of other parts of the Nation are privileged to cast their votes.

In many of the States groups of the League of Women Voters active committees to further procuring a vote for the people of the District of Columbia have been formed. Many of these committees are headed by women who spend at least part of each year in Washington and have contact with the voteless members of the women's organizations of Washington.

Since most of the October meetings of the local clubs and organizations are given over to the reunions and the programs scheduled for the November meetings are of particular interest.

The local club women have an extensive program of work for the public schools, civic betterment and educational projects. Many of the clubs have put off their George Washington Bicentennial celebration until this fall and the November meetings will include special discussion and lectures on the life of Washington.

The women patriotic groups will join in the celebration of Navy Day, October 27, and plans for the winter's activities in regard to national defense will be discussed.

How to Keep Well

By DR. W. A. EVANS

Avoid Emotions.

J. S. writes: In a recent article on a woman who has worn out emotionally, indifference to everybody and everything was suggested for recovery.

1. Does this indifference to everything refer to the use of stimulants such as coffee and tobacco?

2. Will the use of these drugs hinder the recovery if the user is in the habit of taking them moderately?

REPLY.

1. It did not. The advice was to avoid indulgence in every form of emotion and emotional experience. These are not served in cups. Tobacco and coffee are drugs.

2. I don't think so. It is not good judgment to pick a "worn out" period as the time to wrestle with a drug habit. Don't dig up more snakes than you can kill.

Eclipse in Pool.

H. B. B. writes: I read your article on the eclipse and the eyes, and I have seen no mention of the method I used which proved delightfully pleasant for the eyes. I was driving across the country on the day of the eclipse and found two pairs of dark eyeglasses not sufficient to allow observation of the phenomenon. However, the country just west of Des Moines had had hard showers in the night and wayside puddles gave me the needed opportunity, with their clear and soft reflection. Stops were made at frequent intervals and the eclipse comfortably enjoyed.

REPLY.

Some who were not lucky enough to be in a puddly country used mirrors. The mirror method was nearer the border line of danger than the puddle method. The papers are reporting cases of troublesome eye injuries caused by trying to see the eclipse with the unprotected eye.

EPILEPSY.

B. C. S. writes: Is Jacksonian epilepsy hereditary? What causes it other than a blow on the head? Would it be advisable for a woman with a mild case of it to have a child? It developed in the middle thirties.

REPLY.

Jacksonian epilepsy follows fractures of the skull, tumors, hemorrhages and chronic meningitis. It is not hereditary. The child of a parent with the disorder should not be epileptic.

ALL-BRAN AS CEREAL.

A. B. C. writes: I havve been eating all-bran as a cereal for breakfast for two years. I have been told that continuous use will scrape the lining of the stomach.

REPLY.

People with spastic colon find bran too irritating. Most persons are in the class who would benefit from eating it.

Grand Master Thomas C. Mettler, accompanied by the grand officers of the Grand Lodge, made an official visit to Salem Lodge Thursday evening, a large attendance of the members being present. A feature of the visitation was the presence and address by Deputy Grand Master Norval H. Daughtery, of Pennsylvania, who gave a splendid talk which was highly enjoyed by all present. Records of the lodge as reported to the grand master by Grand Secretary Andresen and Grand Treasurer James E. Chamberlain showed the lodge to be holding its own. The officers gave an excellent rendition of their work before the grand representatives, Brothers Past Grand Master W. W. Millan and Wilfred E. Lawson.

The Rebekah anniversary celebration was held last night at Odd Fellows Temple. The auditorium of the Temple was filled with members and their friends. A program of entertainment was presented and the address of the evening was made by Sister Grand Warden Marian S. Gelman, of the Rebekah Assembly. Sister Emma Tress Strobel presided as chairman of the committee in charge.

On next Sunday evening will be held the Rebekah divine service under the auspices of the Rebekah Assembly at St. Paul's English Lutheran Church, Connecticut avenue and Everett street northwest, 7:30 o'clock. Sister J. B. Kincer, chairman of the committee in charge, announces that the pastor of the church, the Rev. Dr. Henry C. Snyder, will deliever a special message to the members assembled. The Rebekahs urge upon all subordinate and Rebekah lodges to attend these services in large delegations. The Rev. Snyder is one of the outstanding preachers in the city and the service promises to be an exceptional one. All members will assemble in the Sunday school room prior to entering the church proper at 7:30 o'clock.

The Bicentennial celebration in the auditorium of McKinley High School, Third and T streets northeast, will be held on Friday evening, October 28, at 8:15 o'clock. This is the Odd Fellows' contribution to the "Father of His Country," therefore every member should make an effort to attend and bring along a friend. The Columbia Players have been engaged for this celebration and Chairman Lemuel H. Windsor, past grand master, promises that this event will be worthy of anyone's presence. P. G. M. Lemuel H. Windsor and Sister Past President Mary P. Pollock are in charge of the committee as a whole. Invitation cards which have been given out for distribution to members to invite their friends have been exhausted, but the grand master has furnished a new supply for distribution which can be secured from any representative of any lodge or from the office of the grand secretary.

Of prime interest to every member in this jurisdiction is the coming divine services which will be held on Sunday afternoon, November 6, at 4 o'clock, in the Washington Cathedral. The services will be held in the new great choir, recently completed, and the Odd Fellows will be the first to assemble for services as an roganization. Bishop James E. Freeman will officiate and deliver a special message on this occasion. The services also will be broadcast.

It is expected that over 500 Odd Fellows and Rebekahs will attend the services, and special arrangements are being made for seating of the organization members and their friends.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS.

Fourth District Executive committeeman Lee T. Turner, National Rehabilitation Chairman Ralph L. Chambers and National Rehabilitation Officers Fred Kochli and John M. Egense, of the Washington staff, were in Norfolk, Va., October 8 and 9 for the organization of a State department of the Disabled American Veterans in Virginia. A mass meeting was held, at which speeches were made by Comrades Kochli and Egense.

At 3 p. m. Saturday the convention meeting was called to order by Comrade Turner. Representatives of the D. A. V. from Roanoke, Norfolk, Petersburg, Charlottesville, Alexandria, Portsmouth, Magic City were present. All action for the organization, adoption of the constitution and election of officers were unanimous. The following officers were elected: Department commander, Walter W. Loftin, Norfolk Chapter; senior vice commander, L. H. Mitchell, Eagle City Chapter; first junior vice commander, S. W. Lawrence, Arlington Chapter; second junior vice commander, W. E. Fasnacht, Charlottesville Chapter; treasurer, M. G. Robinson, Portsmouth Chapter; adjutant, F. W. Higgason, Norfolk Chapter.

At the mass meeting speeches were made by Comrades Kochli, Turner, Egense and Chambers on legislation, organization and membership, forget-me-nots and rehabilitation, respectively. Talks were also made by Comrades Higgason, of Norfolk Chapter, and G. W. Breahan, of the Portsmouth Chapter.

The Department of Virginia has promised a membership of 911 in that State by the time of the next national convention.

Federal Chapter, at its first open meeting last Tuesday evening in the board room of the District Building, was addressed by E. Claude Babcock, secretary of the United States Civil Service Commission and past national commander of the D. A. V., and by John Arthur Shaw, junior vice commander of the department.

At the meeting of the executive committee last week plans and ideas were discussed for a more intensive membership drive during the ensuing months.

Having completed a reorganization of the Department of Virginia, Lee T. Turner, of this city, national executive committeeman for the D. A. V., fourth district, is now in correspondence with Maryland members of the organization looking toward the unification of the D. A. V. in that State.

Committeeman Turner is hopeful of having the Maryland meeting before the Christmas holidays.

The District of Columbia Department of the D. A. V. has made representations to the veterans administration looking toward the transferring of the Civil Service employes' retirement activities from the administration to the Civil Service Commission.

Correspondence now reaching the Washington office of the D. A. V. indicates chapters in various parts of the country—particularly in the far West—are using their influence to retard plans for the organization of another bonus march on Washington.

When the Workers' Ex-servicemen's League — admittedly communistic— held a conference at Cleveland recently to formulate plans on the move to this city, the D. A. V. had unofficial observers present and, based upon this report, the organization of the disabled intends to explain to the veterans the utter futility of such marches from a legislative standpoint, as well as the distress that will follow during the coming winter if large bodies of veterans plan to camp here to be supported by the charitable organizations of this city.

The records of the veterans administration show that more transportation was furnished by the Government to get marchers back to California than to any other state. However, one of the strongest pleas against another march which was planned here for next December has come from the Los Angeles County Council of the D. A. V.

National commander, William Conley, of Los Angeles; executive committeeman, Lee T. Turner, of this city, and rehabilitation officer, Casey M. Jones, of this city, will be the national officers of the D. A. V. who will participate in the dedication of the new Veterans' Hospital at Huntington, W. Va., October 23.

The annual conference of the legal advisory council of the Veterans Administration will be held here tomorrow and Tuesday. This council was organized at the recommendation of the D. A. V. several years ago when there were so many complaints against alleged irregularities in the guardianships of mentally disabled men. Joe McQueen, of Kansas City, who was wounded in action while leading his company of the Missouri National Guard, is the D. A. V. representative on the council and will attend all sessions.

The occasion was the installation of the newly elected commander, Mary Z. Weide, and her officers. 3,000 TROOPS MARCH BEFORE GEN. MALONE

More than 3,000 troops, representing the full mobile peace strength of the regular Army in the Third Corps Area, passed in final review at Fort Meade, Md., Saturday, October 8, before their commander, Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone, in the concluding phase of the corps area maneuvers.

Commanded by Brig. Gen. Ernest D. Scott, First Field Artillery Brigade, the various units formed on the review field at 10 a. m. and were formally presented to the corps area commander. The latter made the regular inspection by a "ride-around," after which the entire force marched by in review.

Leading the marching columns was the Sixteenth Infantry Brigade commanded by Brig. Gen. Perry L. Miles, of Washington, and consisting of the Twelfth and Thirty-fourth Infantry Regiments. Next in line came the First Field Artillery Brigade composed of the Sixth Field Artillery, Fort Hoyle, and the First Battalion, Sixteenth Field Artillery, from Fort Myer, Va.

One squadron of the Third Cavalry from Fort Myer, under command of Maj. Alexander D. Surles, came next with the First Chemical Company, Edgewood Arsenal; the First Medical Regiment, Carlisle Barracks, Pa.; the Thirtieth Ordnance Company, Fort George G. Meade, and the Fifteenth Ordnance Company, Fort Hoyle, together with the combat and field trains of the various organizations following in order.

Tanks in Separate Review.

Lack of tank carriers prevented the 64 tanks of the First Tank Regiment, Fort Meade, from passing by in the main review, and they were reviewed on a separate field with the tanks passing in column of platoons with five tanks abreast.

Bringing up the rear, more than 50 bombardment and pursuit planes from Langley Field, and five observation planes from Mitchell Field, N. Y., swept by the review point in impressive formations. At the conclusion of the review all units except one rifle and machine gun section from each battalion of infantry and the cavalry squadron were released for return to home stations. Those retained will fire combat tests against field targets on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

Friday's exercises which ended the tactical phases of the eight days training and inspection period saw composite units organized at war strength employed in a field problem against an assumed enemy. For many of the junior officers it was the first opportunity to witness a demonstration of units organized at war strength. The composite battalion of infantry was commanded by Lieut. Col. Louis A. Kunzig, of Fort Washington, and the Field Artillery battalion by Lieut. Col. Sherman Miles, of Fort Hoyle.

Hostile Force Assumed.

The theoretical background for this exercise assumed a hostile force as having landed in the Patapsco River and marching overland on the National Capital. The forces actually engaged represented the advance guard of the Red or invading force with Blue defenders assumed. Field umpires exercised control of the situation by depicting the probable effect of hostile fire and the outline of hostile defenses.

Tanks equipped with radios advanced with the assault waves and transmitted battle information to Gen. Malone, riding in a radio equipped command tank, while key positions in the enemy lines were blinded by smoke laid down by means of candles simulating the mortar fire of the supporting chemical warfare company.

Artillery commanders also kept close contact with the advance elements by means of field wire laid from reels carried on the back of a mule through liaison officers accompanying the assault echelons.

The functioning of all means of communication drew special commendation from Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone, corps area commander, who directed the exercise and acted as chief umpire.

The last conference of the school year will be conducted June 7. A survey of the operation of the agencies of communication used by field artillery units will be discussed. This course is given in seven lessons.

The 313th Field Artillery is part of the 155th Field Artillery Brigade of the Eightieth Division. The regiment was organized in August, 1917, at Camp Lee, Va., and saw service in France during the World War. The regiment left Camp Lee, Va., in May, 1918; landed in Bordeaux, France; trained in Brittany and was in reserve during the St. Mihiel attack. On September 25, 1918, the regiment went into position near Verdun on the right flank of the American line. It remained continuously in action until November 11, 1918, a total of 47 days, having advanced along the left bank of the Meuse to near Stenay, one battalion having crossed the river on November 10. Col. Leroy W. Heron is the commanding officer of the regiment.

Those who have run into difficulty in the first lessons or any other lesson, should communicate at once with their instructor, or call the chief clerk at Reserve headquarters for information.

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES

The annual gathering of the officers of the Third Infantry, District of Columbia National Guard, which was in existence prior to the World War, was held at a local hotel on Monday evening. Maj. Gen. Anton Stephan, now commanding the District of Columbia National Guard, presided.

The reading by Lieut. Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, Assistant Adjutant General of the District of Columbia National Guard, of extracts from letters, telegrams and records of telephone conversations addressed to the mustering officer and Brig. Gen. William E. Harvey, then commanding the District troops, in connection with duty performed at Fort Myer, Va., in 1916, formed a high light of the evening. This material, having come to notice in the files of the Adjutant General's office, revealed to Col. Glendie B. Young, who commanded the Third Infantry in 1916, and other officers, interesting facts theretofore unknown to them.

It was the desire of the War Department to mobilize all troops of the District of Columbia National Guard on the Mexican border, and on June 25, 1916, orders were actually issued for the movement of the Third District of Columbia Infantry and the First Separate Battalion to proceed on July 3 to Bisbee, Ariz. As a result of the interchange of communications between Gen. Harvey and Gen. Leonard Wood, then commanding the Eastern Department, and located at Governor's Island, New York, the departure of District of Columbia troops to the border was delayed by orders of July 16 "until the entire regiment is ready and fully equipped in every respect."

Corporal Joseph R. Bordas, Company A, 121st Engineers, has been reduced to private and Private, first class, Albert C. Johnson, of the same unit, promoted to corporal. In Battery B, 260th Coast Artillery, Private, first class, Harry F. Rohrkemper has been promoted to corporal.

Last Sunday marked the first drill of the band of the 121st Engineer Regiment, under recent special orders from the headquarters of that regiment. The band, under the leadership of Warrant Officer Meyer N. Goldman, will assemble hereafter at 10:30 o'clock each Sunday morning for a regular drill period.

Transfers from the active National Guard to the National Guard Reserve have been announced as follows: Because of educational interference with the performance of military duties: Privates Dudley C. Webb and Arthur W. Finkelstein, Battery B, 260th Coast Artillery; Privates Peter J. Loftus and Frank L. Thather, headquarters and service company, 121st Engineers. By reason of business interference: Private William R. Dulin, Quartermaster Corps, State Detachment; Privates William H. Cook, Bert A. Howard, Joseph H. Miller, Francis L. Moorer and John C. Stanley, Battery C, 260th Coast Artillery, and Privates Hubert H. Council, Reuben R. Duffie, and Oswald R. Hill, Company A, 121st Engineers. Temporary removal from the District of Columbia: Private Irving P. Burton, Battery E, 260th Coast Artillery.

The President of the United States has accepted the resignation of First Lieut. Louis M. Swingle as an officer of the District of Columbia National Guard. Lieut. Swingle, formerly of the 260th Coast Artillery, was at the time of the acceptance of his resignation on the unassigned list.

Privates Kenneth A. Winters and Randolph Cantor have been transferred from the National Guard Reserve to the active list and assigned to Battery E, 260th Coast Artillery, and headquarters detachment, Twenty-ninth Division, respectively. Private Raymond Edens, Medical Department Detachment, 260th Coast Artillery, has been transferred to the National Guard Reserve, assigned to the same unit.

Six members of the National Guard Reserve, assigned to the Medical Department Detachment, 260th Coast Artillery, have been transferred in the grade of private to other units of the same regiment: To Battery A, Sergt. Walter G. Walcavich and Private Stephen J. Devine; to Battery B, Privates Raymond Edens and Alexander W. Kramer; to Battery C, Privates Perry W. Michaels and Richard C. Sikes.

Invitations have been issued by the officers of the 121st Engineer Regiment for a dance to be held at the armory on Saturday evening, October 29.

The training program of Company A, 372d Infantry, commanded by Capt. Arthur C. Newman, has been approved by the commanding general, Third Corps Area. The training objective is twofold: First, to maintain the unit in condition to function effectively at existing strength without further training when called upon in emergencies by the Federal Government, and, second, to provide a sufficiently trained force capable of rapid expansion to war strength, which, with the minimum delay can be employed in time of war as an effective combatant component of the Army of the United States.

Take-Offs and Landings

By HARRIS B. HULL

THE express business is definitely taking to the air according to statistics assembled for the first sixth months that this form of traffic has been seriously solicited by aviation transport companies.

When the airlines first went into this business they did it half heartedly. Facilities for the handling of the packages between airport and the shipper and consignee were not smoothly worked out. As a result no great amount of business was done and observers were prone to comment that the express business would stay on the ground.

Then the airline chiefs got their heads together. They worked out a program of cooperation calling for a uniform bill of lading. They forwarded packages between systems, thus offering service to a greater area and increasing its value to the shipper. They made a contract with a national messenger company to carry the packages without delay to and from the airport. They did everything possible to develop the market for air express and in turn they found that there is a good market.

LaMotte T. Cohu, president of American Airways, one of the members of the general air express agreement which brings cooperation between the airlines into the business, stated the situation last week by saying:

"Air express shipments for the nine months ended September 30 were more than three times the express total for the entire year 1931.

"With coast-to-coast delivery possible with the loss of only a single business day the advantage of air express is readily apparent, but it is in the short hauls that the retailer finds air express most advantageous. Shipments made in Boston at noontime are delivered to New York retailers before closing time that night, while Dallas wholesalers find it possible to make shipments in the morning for delivery before store closing hours as far East as Birmingham and as far West as Phoenix.

"The shipments have shown a radical increase the past several months because of the use of this speedy form of transport by jobbers and manufacturers who are called upon to supply urgently needed goods for depleted retailers."

THE roster of the Caterpillar Club is steadily mounting to the 500 mark. According to the best information available the lives of 479 Americans have been saved thus far by "bailing out." Eighteen of the members of the club have made more than one jump.

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh is still the supreme commander of the Caterpillar Club with four jumps. Other high ranking officials who have passed their second degree include Maj. James A. Doolittle, Capt. Frank Hunter, Capt. James T. Hutchinson, Lieut. Arthur R. Kingham, James A. Ronin, John G. Fowler, Sergt. Fred P. Miller, Lieut. Frederick Trapnell (remember his dog which was found the day after he jumped over the Anacostia station?), Air Mail Pilots Harry Sievers, Samuel J. Samson, Verne Treat, James Rutledge, and others.

If Caterpillar Club statistics mean anything, it may be said that airplane accidents are steadily decreasing in number. In the period from January 1 to September 15, 1930, a total of 101 jumps was made. Last year in this period the number was 63, while this year it was 51. "Slump" is an unwelcome word these days, but it does sound good in reference to Caterpillar Club activities.

IN the interest of safety James M. Eaton, president of the Ludington Line is considering the advisability of having an autogiro carry him from his office at the airport to his home at Wardman Park Hotel.

Eaton has flown thousands of hours but last week had his first narrow escape, and it wasn't in an airplane. Leaving downtown New York Tuesday afternoon he rode to the airport and boarded one of Ludington ships for Washington. After an uneventful flight he arrived here, transacted some business and took a cab for his hotel. En route in the Northwest area the cab skidded, sideswiped a tree, rolled over and ran into a truck. The airline president crawled out of the wreck with a sprained shoulder.

GEN. CASIMER PULASKI, Polish general who fought for the cause of the colonies in the eighteenth century, long before airplanes were a part and parcel of the mechanism of national defense, was paid an appropriate aviation salute last Tuesday on the 153rd anniversary of his death on the U. S. brig Wasp.

Lieut. Comdr. Arthur Gavin flew a Ford transport from the Naval Air Station, circled the city and the Pulaski monument in Lafayette Square and then flew over the river and dropped a wreath.

DO you know what Z. A. A. means? In the first two years of the use of radio by ships at sea a signal was developed which undoubtedly has become the best known of all those which flash through the air. It is the S O S call of distress, which brings a sudden hush over the ether and electrifies all its hearers.

Now the airliners carry radio. And in the first two years of radio use in airplanes a signal has been developed which is the exact opposite in meaning of S O S. The aircraft signal, instead of being a cry of distress, is a call of assurance. It means, "I am at the proper position, flying on schedule, nothing to report and all is well." That signal is Z. A. A.

THE 409th Attack Squadron, Washington's own Air Corps Reserve unit, is in a unique and advantageous position. Located at the Nation's center of air corps activities, it has placed at its disposal a large and experienced group of regular officers of the Air Corps willing at all times to aid the reservists in working out their training and theoretical problems. And the unit has not been slow in taking advantage of its opportunities.

The squadron has completed plans calling for two conference periods each month instead of the customary one. At the first meeting held last week the reserve fliers heard from Lieut. James A. Willis, jr., assistant operations officer at Bolling, who decides what reserve officers shall fly, how long, and in what planes; Capt. Theodore Koenig, office of the chief of the Air Corps detailed to administrative duties in connection with Air Corps Reserve; Capt. Richard H. Ballard, Col. Charles D. Herron, and Maj. Bennett A. Molter.

BALTIMORE received two additional schedules for the dispatch of United States air mail and air express yesterday when Eastern Air Transport announced that former through flights between Miami and New York and another between New York and Miami would stop at Logan Field at 8:35 a. m. and 5:45 p m., respectively.

A HUNDRED publicity agents throughout the country send out a great mass of material every week concerning a hundred different airplanes. And yet it takes an Englishman to figure out a new wrinkle. From Imperial Airways, in London, last week came several notices of little import, yet attached to them was a nice envelope on which was printed, "Won't you please make use of this convenient wrapper? A copy of the issue containing any of the news items herewith would be much appreciated." What I want to know is who is going to pay the postage?

SYNTHETIC RUBBER INTERESTS ARMY

War Can Cut Off Natural Product Grown in Far East Regions.

The use of synthetic rubber to equip the various branches of the service in times of emergency is the subject of an article carried in the current issue of the Quartermaster Review and written by Capt. Gennad A. Greaves, F. A., Q. M. C., of the Quartermaster Corps Motor School of the Holabird Arsenal. In his article, Capt. Greaves says, in part:

"It is true that Hannibal, Caesar, Washington and Napoleon did without rubber in their armies in the days of hand labor and foot and animal transportation. But in the electrical and motor age it would be an absurdity to imagine ourselves doing without it.

"Every one knows that in the event of a national emergency it is not only possible, but likely, that our rubber supply from the Far East might be cut off. Inasmuch as 95 per cent or more of the world's rubber is grown in the Far East, especially Sumatra, Java, Ceylon and the Malay Peninsula, the cutting off of supplies from those points would completely throttle the American rubber industry. War clouds, almost always on the horizon in some part of the world, have driven governments to consider this problem.

Molecule Puzzles Chemists.

"In order to make a substitute for an article, one should know the composition of its molecule. The molecule of natural rubber is still only partially known. Its complexity has puzzled chemists and caused differences of opinion for many years."

Capt. Greaves explains that every time the production of artificial rubber is in sight the low price of natural rubber has made further continuance of experiments impractical.

"But in spite of the low cost of crude rubber, the DuPont company has proceeded with research work along these lines, and has announced a new synthetic rubber known as duprene. It is understood that a small plant for the production of duprene is under construction. This is the only attempt at producing synthetic rubber that has ever reached the state of commercial production, with the exception of the German development during the war, which has since been abandoned because of its very high cost.

Natural Rubber Is Cheap.

"Natural rubber at 5 cents a pound presents the biggest obstacle to the further development of artificial rubber. It will cost probably 60 cents a pound to produce duprene.

"Natural rubber is composed of unsaturated hydrocarbons. These hydrocarbons must be prepared for other materials. Most of the earlier workers on synthetic rubber used starch as a raw material, but duprene is made from acetylene, which is, in turn, derived from coal and lime.

"It will take a long time to develop a tire of artificial rubber, and manufacturers will be in no hurry to undertake this development. Will the more exhaustive study of this subject and the more searching experiments be undertaken in the Army before the tire of artificial rubber is autually needed, or will every one wait until after the enemy has severed our lines of communication with Sumatra and Ceylon?"

Capt. L. L. Tanney Retired.

Capt. Lewis L. Tanney, Medical Administration Corps, of 4427 Ord street northeast, has been retired from active service to take effect October 31. Capt. Tanney has had more than 30 years' active service.

NAVY WILL OBSERVE 'AT HOME' ON OCT. 27

Visitors Will Be Received Everywhere to Note Fleets' Accomplishments.

October 27 is Navy Day. This is one day when Navy men all over the world honor the great men of the past 150-odd years—fellow sailors—whose naval technique and seamanship were devoted to the building up of the United States Navy.

October 27 was selected as Navy Day since it is the anniversary of the establishment of the American Navy by the Continental Congress in 1775. It is also the anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt, much of whose life was devoted to establishing a sound naval policy for the United States. It will be remembered that as Assistant Secretary of the Navy and finally, as President, Theodore Roosevelt bent his energies to impress upon the American people the necessity for an adequate Navy and, through his leadership, to realize that ideal.

Apart from Navy Day there is little opportunity to place before the public, by direct contact, any of the fundamental reasons why the United States Navy is maintained. On this day visitors will find naval stations and ships thrown open to the public. It is the Navy's day "at home."

It is indeed a fitting time to point to a few of the accomplishments of our Navy in fields other than war.

Viewed in the light of its practical devotion to public good and with regard to ultimate distribution of its cost, the Navy is anything but parasitic. It justifies its existence directly and indirectly day by day.

The Navy's energies and the Navy's moneys are directed into so many different channels, with unattendant publicity, that it is little wonder that the average person fails to think of the Navy other than as an aggressive instrument. The benefits to industry which have been occasioned by the building and the maintenance of our Navy, and the fact that every dollar spent in this connection has been returned to the people several times over in the direct stimulus and aid it has given to the remarkable industrial development in our country, are generally entirely overlooked.

To elaborate upon the manner in which the peacetime work of the Navy in numerous ways favorably affects the country as a whole would require excessive space.

In industry, in science, in diplomacy, as a factor in national sociology and as a carrier of relief on errands of mercy the Navy has become so surely a part of the national and international life that any weakening of the organization would be immediately apparent in our day-to-day progress.

Constitution Plans Extra Mail Cachet

Navy Day, October 27, to Be Honored at Historic Frigate.

A special cachet for mail on the U. S. S. Constitution, the historic frigate, now at the Navy Yard, Washington, has been arranged for Navy Day, Thursday, October 27.

The mail clerk of the Constitution will receive addressed and properly stamped envelopes for this special marking, up to midnight October 26.

Mail to be marked by the cachet should be inclosed in an outer covering and sent to: "Mail Clerk, U. S. S. Constitution, Navy Yard, Washington, D. C."

Silver Star Citation Is Given for Gallantry

Announcement has been made at the War Department of the award of a Silver Star citation for gallantry in action to Lawrence Steppello, formerly sergeant, Company B, 165th Infantry, Forty-second Division. The citation reads: "For gallantry in action near Landres-et-St. Georges, France, October 15, 1918." Steppello is from New York.

NAVAL RESERVE NOTES

By ENSIGN JACK STAHL, U. S. N. R.

The officers and men of the Aviation Section of the Naval Reserve of the District of Columbia have shown gratifying interest in their branch of the reserve and there is keen competition for the vacancies available to enlisted men. More than 40 men attended the drill held Thursday at Anacostia, even though there were only a few vacancies available. These vacancies will be filled by the best qualified men who display the most interest in the activities of this organization.

The regular meeting of the Aviation Section takes place on Thursdays of each week, but arrangements are made so that flights can be made on Saturday afternoons and Sunday mornings. Many officers of the group take advantage of this opportunity to secure additional instruction and training.

The aim of the instruction given these men is to fit them to enter active service in case of national emergency and be qualified in every way to take their places on plane carriers or whereever they are assigned with as much smoothness as possible; therefore the latest methods of instruction in navigation, radio, &c., as outlined by the Navy Department are given these men.

The number of men allotted to the reserve has recently been increased and new planes have been assigned to this group. Also the work on the new building is rapidly nearing completion and these men will soon be able to occupy their own quarters at Anacostia.

Those responsible for the high standing and for the progress made by this group are Lieut. Comdr. Edward W. Rounds (A. F.), U. S. N. R., who is the commanding officer; Lieut. Comdr. Clarence H. Schildhauer, U. S. N. R., who is the executive officer, and Lieut. Malcolm Cibukey, who is on permanent active duty and is responsible for the training and instruction of the reserve.

PHANTOM TREASURE SHIP SOUGHT

By James
W.
Booth

MYSTERY Vessel, Bearing Million Dollars' Worth of Furs, Plays Hide and Seek Among the Ice Crags and Floes of the Arctic Ocean, and Heretofore Has Always Eluded Capture

LIKE a ghost rising out of the Arctic Ocean, the fur-trading steamship Baychimo—the Flying Dutchman of the Far North—has been sighted again.

Men with sleds and light native boats of skin are pushing their way over mountainous peaks of ice, stretches of open water and grinding floes with the one desperate hope of retrieving at least a part of the vessel's treasure-trove of furs.

But whether success will mark their venture depends entirely upon the constantly changing moods and whims of King Neptune and his traditional lieutenant, Davy Jones.

For since last October a year ago, when she became locked in the ice south of Point Barrow and had to be abandoned, the Baychimo has been the football of the old man of the deep. Unceremoniously, he has booted it hither and yon among the floes of ice.

Why he has not seen fit to send her and her million-dollar cargo of luxurious furs plunging down into the Port of Missing Ships, deep below the ocean's surface, or, if he has, how the sturdy vessel has been able to withstand such efforts, is one of the mysteries of the sea, and there are many.

EACH year deserted ice-locked ships are seen in the polar seas, drifting at the mercy of the wind and current, their broken masts and crumbling rigging hung with icicles and their decks and cabins buried in snow. But they are seldom seen a second time. Davy Jones' locker claims them!

But the Baychimo has been the exception to the rule. Three times this sturdy vessel of the Hudson's Bay Company has been sighted since a sudden south wind sprang up and pushed the ice in solid about her sides last autumn.

Once, in February of this year, adventurers risked their lives to take fourteen bales of fur from her hold. When they returned for more, however, the Baychimo had disappeared. Neptune had booted her on her way again!

And now once more she has been sighted solidly lodged in the ice, this time west of Point Barrow, and again men are seeking the treasure hoard of fur below her decks.

It is a strange tale, the story of the Baychimo, and, like so many other strange tales of the sea, it defies explanation.

When the steamship became locked in the ice a year ago, Captain Sidney A. Cornwall and a few members of the crew built a crude shack on the shore a mile or more over the frozen wastes from the vessel. They packed the snow tight about its rough walls to keep out the elements. They made stoves out of the oil drums taken from the ship, so that they could keep warm.

And when airplanes took the other members of the crew and agents of the Hudson's Bay Company south to Nome, they settled down to await the distant coming of spring, when the ice would break up and the Baychimo would be free to proceed south again.

It meant waiting through the long, cold, dark Arctic winter, but Cornwall and his men were ready for the ordeal. So they lived, subsisting on canned goods and reindeer meat supplied by friendly Eskimos. Each day two or more of their number trudged out to the steamship to keep the propeller free of ice. It had to be done, no matter how cold the weather or how biting the winter gale. If not, the Baychimo would be a crippled ship unable to navigate when the spring thaw came.

ALL went well until Christmas Eve. That night the temperature rose suddenly from 60 degrees below zero to 10 degrees above, and a fierce gale began blowing from the southwest. The little shack which was home to Captain Cornwall and his men vibrated constantly. It seemed as though it would be blown to pieces any minute by the terrific wind. Outside one could not see one's hand before one's face, so wild were the elements. But then, one did not venture out. It was not safe to do so.

For three days the storm lasted. The open water, out beyond the Baychimo, rose six feet and more, and the ice crushed in toward the shore, piling up ridges fifty to seventy feet in height.

And then toward noon of the third day the storm abated. Peering out from the shack, the men could only see mountainous ridges of ice where the Baychimo had been. By 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the weather was such that they could go outside, and when they did so they found that the Baychimo had vanished.

It did not seem possible the vessel could still be afloat, but there was always the possibility that it was. And with a million dollars' worth of furs aboard it was worth finding out. Airplanes were used to hunt for the missing ship and finally, after many weeks, she was sighted, twisted like putty and with a long gap in her sides, but not yet in Davy Jones' locker.

THE fourteen bales of furs were recovered from her hold before she vanished again. Then weeks passed without another sign of this Flying Dutchman of the North. It appeared certain that she had gone to the bottom.

But no! There came a day in spring when the ice commenced to break up. Out in the open water, five miles off shore, a group of Eskimos were fishing. And while they fished, there came a sudden cracking of the ice. It began to move as the wind opened up leads, and while the Eskimos watched in amazement, a vessel—the Baychimo—rose like a ghost out of the deep gullies in the pack and drifted toward them. But, like a phantom ship, it was gone again before the natives had time to reach shore, report their discovery and bring white men back to the spot.

More weeks went by. Summer again came to the Arctic, came and began to wane, and then, only recently, the Baychimo was sighted for a third time, locked solidly in the ice west of Point Barrow.

Why she has not sunk no one knows. How she has been able to keep afloat with a great gaping hole in her side is as much of a mystery.

BUT the Baychimo is not the first ship to have mysteriously reappeared in the polar seas when all hope of her safety had been abandoned.

There is the case of the Russian sidewheeler Polotofski. She was caught in the ice of St. Michael in December, 1915, and disappeared the following spring in the great storm off Cape Nome. It was thought she had been ground to kindling and sunk. Toward evening one day eight years later, however, the Polotofski was discovered and identified by a party of Eskimos hunting walrus. Plans were made to board her next morning, but, like the Baychimo, she vanished before morning came. During the night a changing wind swept her far north into the unexplored wastes, and she was seen no more.

But the Arctic has no mortgage on the mysteries of the deep. The Seven Seas are full of them, each one as unexplainable as the other.

Sometimes a vessel is found abandoned at sea without any explanation or means of discovering the cause of her condition. Such a case was that of the Yula Maru, a Japanese steamship found in midocean with eight dead men on her deck. What had become of the rest of the crew was never known.

The greatest mystery is that of the Marie Celeste. She was discovered with all sails set headed toward Gibraltar. There was no sign of life aboard the vessel nor, most unusual of all, was there any sign of her having been abandoned. Everything was in order, boats were all in place and ropes were neatly coiled.

The mystery deepened when the boarding party entered the cabin. On the table was a half-eaten meal, at which four, including a child, evidently had sat not long since. The child had almost finished a plate of porridge. By the captain's plate lay two halves of a hard-boiled egg, both in the shell. Close by was an upright and uncorked bottle of cough medicine, indicating the weather had not been heavy enough to topple it over.

Under the needle of a sewing machine was a child's pinafore. Whoever had been using the machine had stopped stitching in the middle of a sleeve. The captain's cabin was shipshape and the cash box was untouched.

The only thing missing, as nearly as could be found, was the ship's chronometer. However, the captain's watch was found in his cabin. There was nothing in the log to tell a tale of storm, disease, fire or other disaster.

Many surmises have been made regarding the mystery, and books have even been written suggesting a solution. One of these insists that the passengers must have all gone in swimming except the captain. He, it says, must have been timing a race with the chronometer, his watch being broken, when the vessel gave a lurch, threw him overboard and sailed away before any of the swimmers could reach her.

Another surmise, made seriously by its author, is that all hands were standing by the rail when a tidal wave spilled them off. This theory has been generally laughed at, it being pointed out that such a thing would not have been possible without deranging the equipment on the decks. All this was years ago, and it is almost certain that her mystery will never be solved.

HAD it not been for the wireless, it is doubtful whether the world would ever have known the circumstances of the Titanic's sinking. Yet it was not the wireless that told of the last tragic moments aboard that ill-fated vessel.

In 1929 a man walking along the sands of a quiet bay, the Mumbles of Swansea, South Wales, came upon a bottle containing a note, a gold scarf-pin with a stone missing, and a photograph of two men. The note read: "This is the last moment the great ship Titanic sank. I am left here with my brother-in-law, John Williams, my wife and little child, Jean, having left the doomed ship on the last boat. The band is still playing, the officers are running here and there and men are going mad, whole——" The rest of the message was unreadable.

This tragic message, so strangely cast up from Davy Jones' graveyard, seventeen years afterward, throws light on the last moments of the Titanic.

Ever since men have gone down to the sea in ships there have been ocean mysteries which defy explanation, and there undoubtedly always will be. That of the Baychimo and of the Spanish fishing smack, San Antonio, are the latest.

LAST July the steamship Luis I entered the port of Almeria, Spain, towing the fishing smack, which had been found with all sails set, but without a crew.

The day previous the San Antonio had been sighted under full sail some miles off the Spanish coast. The attention of the skipper on the bridge of the Luis I was attracted to the vessel because of the odd course she was pursuing. The curious movement made the skipper wonder what was the matter with the man at the wheel.

He trained his glasses on the boat and was astonished to see that no one was at the wheel or anywhere on deck. When no signs of life became visible after some ten minutes of watching, he gave orders to come about so that he might investigate more closely.

When the Luis I came within hailing distance and still no one appeared on deck, he gave orders to lower a boat and went aboard to find the trouble.

Boarding the sailing vessel, he discovered there was not a soul on board. Everything on deck and in the cabin was in shipshape order, just as it had been aboard the Marie Celeste, and there was nothing to indicate when and why the crew had abandoned the ship if, indeed, she ever had been manned by a crew.

What is the answer to the riddle of the crewless San Antonio?

Spanish port authorities explained that she "probably" had been swept from her moorings during a storm, but those mariners who believe the legend of the "Flying Dutchman" is not all mythology are not content with such a matter-of-fact explanation.

QUIT Dissecting Romance

Advises MARGARET WIDDEMER

Psychoanalysis Has Caused Love to Lose Much of Its True Beauty and Has Covered With a Mask the Real Feelings of Modern-Day People, Says Prominent American Writer; Would Abandon False Ideas in Life

In an Interview With
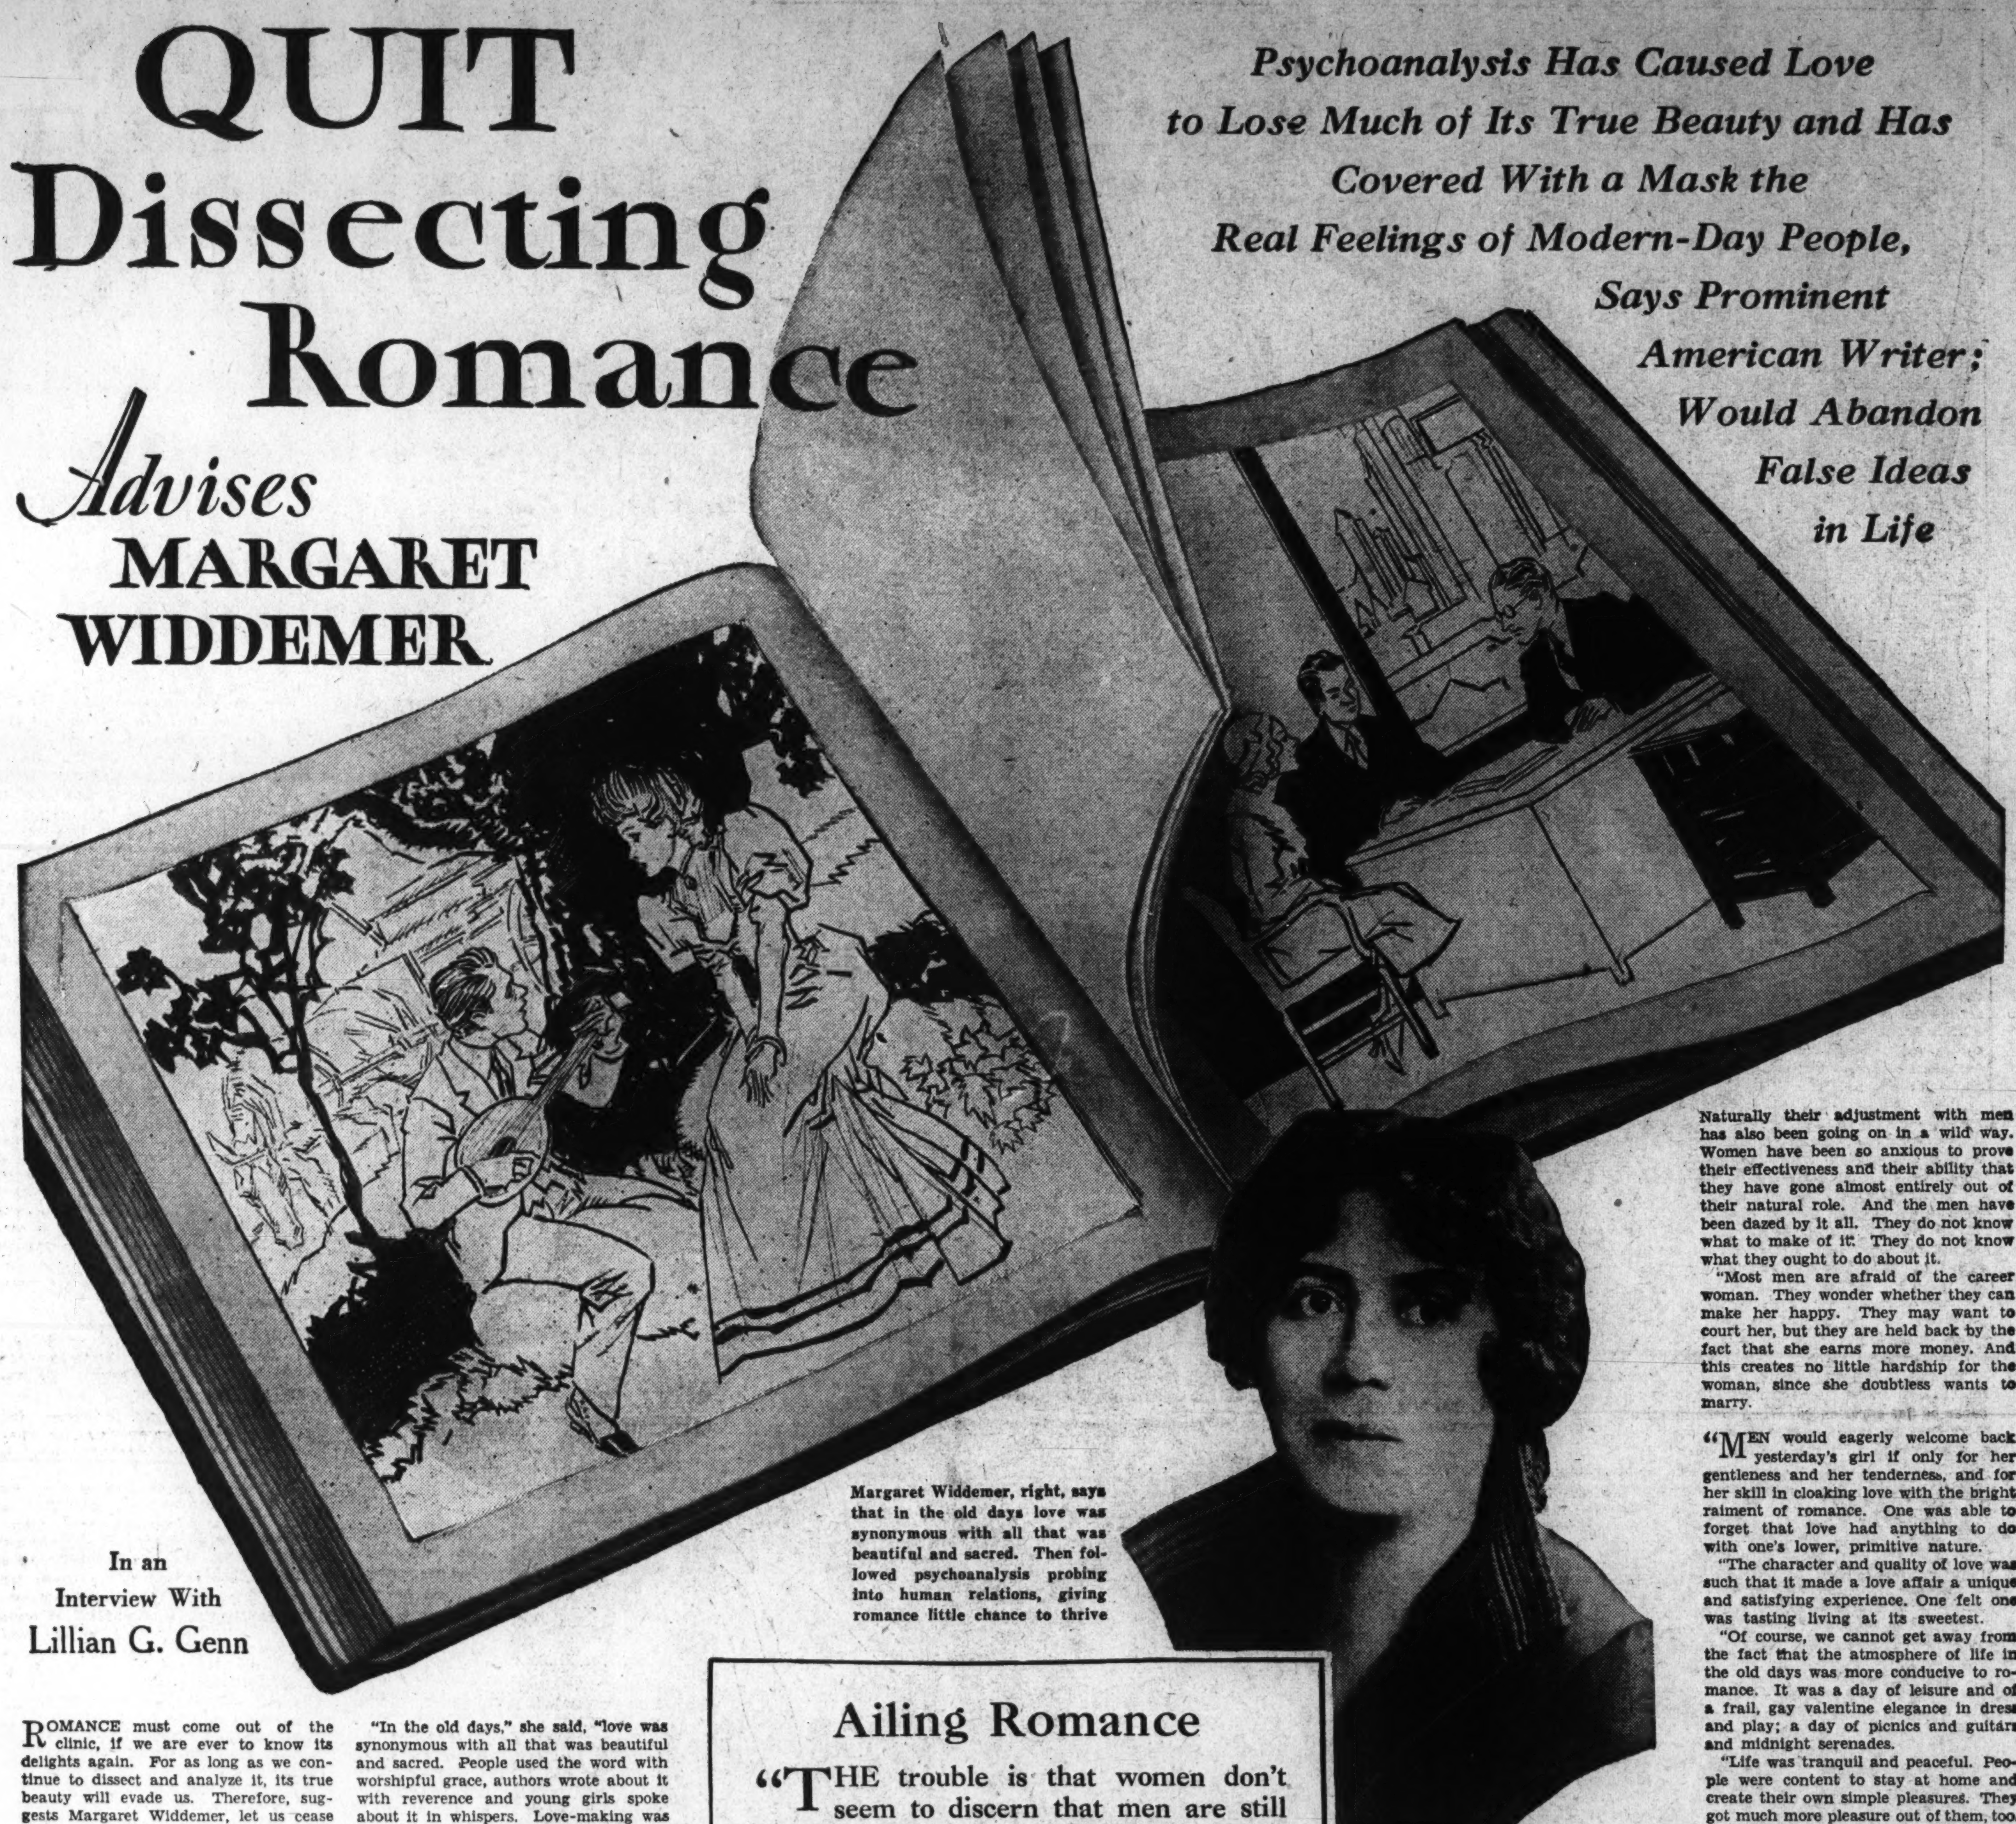
Lillian G. Genn



Margaret Widdemer, right, says that in the old days love was synonymous with all that was beautiful and sacred. Then followed psychoanalysis probing into human relations, giving romance little chance to thrive

Ailing Romance

"THE trouble is that women don't seem to discern that men are still idealists in regard to love and marriage," says Margaret Widdemer. "They haven't changed at all. And why should they? After all, woman is man's avocation. She doesn't absorb his life. He can, therefore, afford to dream of an ideal and to wait until he finds her in the flesh.

"On the other hand, men are a woman's job. And she has to take a practical, realistic view of the matter. Nevertheless, she must not forget that it is up to her to preserve the ideal aspects of love.

"Youth still believes in romantic marriages. It still goes through life secretly hoping to meet its prince or dream girl. And when they meet, each hopes that this marriage will be different, and they will live happily ever after."

ROMANCE must come out of the clinic, if we are ever to know its delights again. For as long as we continue to dissect and analyze it, its true beauty will evade us. Therefore, suggests Margaret Widdemer, let us cease with our scientific stripping and clothe romance in some of its ancient glamorous robes so that we can once more know its enchantment.

Miss Widdemer is essentially romantic. One is conscious of this in her poetry and novels and in her conversation. She is tired of pseudo-scientific discussions of romantic love and of our sophisticated attitude toward it, when all the while we want it just as much as the young innocents of the pantalette days.

The author discussed this in her duplex studio apartment in New York, a charming, cozy place with its fireplace, its many books and its beautiful tapestries. A grand piano, strewn with music, recalled that the author was also an accomplished musician and an authority on old songs.

MISS WIDDEMER was born in a rectory at Doylestown, Pa., where her father was a clergyman. Much of her childhood was spent with her grandparents, and she was taught by her grandmother. She was allowed the freedom of a very good library and at an early age was familiar with mythology and history, with Shakespeare and Racine, and with many of the treasures of literature.

When she was about 18 Miss Widdemer took a course of library training at the Drexel Institute of Arts and Sciences in Philadelphia and her first work was cataloguing for Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach, the well-known collector. She later spent another year cataloguing for the library of the University of Pennsylvania, and subsequently gave up the work to devote herself to writing.

Her first book of poems, called "Factory," made a sensation in the world of poetry, and her first novel, "The Rose Garden Husband," which appeared about the same time, became a best seller. She has since won many awards for poems, including the Pulitzer Prize, for her book of verse, "The Old Road to Paradise," and her many novels have been widely read.

Miss Widdemer is a tall, good-looking woman, with large dark eyes and dark hair. She speaks quickly, in a voice that is low and musical.

"In the old days," she said, "love was synonymous with all that was beautiful and sacred. People used the word with worshipful grace, authors wrote about it with reverence and young girls spoke about it in whispers. Love-making was reserved for sweet-scented gardens and moonlit lanes. And endearments of love were used only when there was deep feeling behind them.

"Then psychoanalysis became the rage and people began to dig down into the raw bones of love. They talked about it incessantly and in the same manner as they did politics or their food. The word was so bandied about in public and endearments so frequently used on any stranger that it lost its meaning.

"Naturally, since we were continually being told that romance was a mask of excitement, we came vaguely to feel that we were making fools of ourselves in accepting any primary emotions but lust, pride and hate. What further discouraged the expression of any genuine feeling was the fact that radio, movies and popular songs played up romantic love in a cheap way and in the worst possible taste. That was because they had to cater chiefly to an audience that didn't know Dante's love for Beatrice from that of Bertha, the beautiful sewing-machine girl.

"WITH romantic love being attacked on all sides, we began to engage in an elaborate game of making believe that we were no longer romantic. We pretended to be hard and sophisticated. But it isn't in human nature to be that way. We are fundamentally romantic and always have and will be so.

"As yet we do not want to admit that what we crave is straight romance. But if you want to tell the emotion and feeling of the time, you can always find it by looking at the fashions. We want the old-fashioned feminine things that suggest romance. We have been homesick for them. Two years ago we began to have a passion for plays that were about any decade but our own. If we could not have romance in actuality, we would fill our need by reading and hearing about it.

"So, even though we hear criticism of romantic love, and it is no longer considered the fashion to be romantic, yet inwardly we are as romantic as ever. Youth still believes in romantic marriages. It still goes through life secretly hoping to meet its prince or its dream girl. And when they meet, each hopes that this marriage will be different and, as in the old fairy tale, they will live happily ever after. Under their pretended armor of hardness and sophistication they continue to clutch at romance.

"But because this scientific, matter-of-fact world insists on probing into the most intimate human relations, and getting at the facts, romance has little chance to thrive. In fact, one of the reasons why so many marriages go to pieces is because people expect romance even while they inconsistently tear apart attitudes and emotions and subject the relationship to all sorts of experiments.

"We must realize, of course, that in every age, some of the old garments of romance have to be discarded. The free relationship that now exists between young men and women has meant a change in the costume of romance. It has meant different codes. Young people who work and play together can't be expected to have the same kind of courtship as those of a generation or two ago. Young people then saw each other only under the eyes of their elders. The nice girl of that day knew no more about a man than if she had talked over the telephone with him. She never got a chance to exchange an idea with him.

"Boys and girls today may be too intimate with each other, but at least they get a chance to exchange some ideas. They don't wear masks when they are with each other, and there's a chance for genuine friendship to develop.

"If to know each other well means that romance must be destroyed, then such romance can go by the board. But I do not believe that real romance is based on ignorance and deception. It is not a fragile thing which can be blown into wisps by any adverse wind.

"If this were not true, then romance could not survive after marriage. And yet I know a couple who have been married fifty years who are still very much in love with each other. I know dozens of other people who have held their love in all the ecstasy of its beginning.

"ROMANCE can endure when enduring qualities are brought to bear upon it. It grows stronger and more beautiful with the knowing.

"If a marriage becomes a monotonous affair, devoid of romance, it is not because marriage makes it so. It is the fault of the two persons who are married that it becomes that way. Any relationship on God's earth is exactly what two persons make it. It will be exciting or dull, it will be romantic or burdensome, depending upon the persons themselves.

"If you are the sort of person that gets fun and excitement out of a thing, it is because you have that fun and excitement in you. I have known men who could not be anything but dull and boring whether they were in a business office or at a party. On the other hand, I have known persons who could marry a wooden figure and get fun out of the relationship.

"I do not mean to say that life is entirely what you make it. If you marry the wrong person, it may be impossible to make a success of the relationship. But what I do want to bring out is that marriage is no different from any other relationship. If a friendship or a business association goes to pieces, we don't blame the institution. It is the people themselves who have made it fail.

"If there is to be color and feeling and romance in marriage, it must come from those who are creating the relationship."

The fact that women are more concerned with their freedom and their rights often causes romance to take to its heels.

"Women are as yet intoxicated with their freedom," said Miss Widdemer. "The last few years have been hectic ones of experimentation for them. Naturally their adjustment with men has also been going on in a wild way. Women have been so anxious to prove their effectiveness and their ability that they have gone almost entirely out of their natural role. And the men have been dazed by it all. They do not know what to make of it. They do not know what they ought to do about it.

"Most men are afraid of the career woman. They wonder whether they can make her happy. They may want to court her, but they are held back by the fact that she earns more money. And this creates no little hardship for the woman, since she doubtless wants to marry.

"MEN would eagerly welcome back yesterday's girl if only for her gentleness and her tenderness, and for her skill in cloaking love with the bright raiment of romance. One was able to forget that love had anything to do with one's lower, primitive nature.

"The character and quality of love was such that it made a love affair a unique and satisfying experience. One felt one was tasting living at its sweetest.

"Of course, we cannot get away from the fact that the atmosphere of life in the old days was more conducive to romance. It was a day of leisure and of a frail, gay valentine elegance in dress and play; a day of picnics and guitars and midnight serenades.

"Life was tranquil and peaceful. People were content to stay at home and create their own simple pleasures. They got much more pleasure out of them, too. Now everything is canned and manufactured for us. We do nothing for ourselves. We turn on the radio, go to the movies and watch the sports and games.

"All the arts people were supposed to practice for their own enjoyment, like singing and painting and playing the piano, they now do not dare to do unless they can perform them perfectly. I believe that as long as one derives pleasure from these things, one should do them, even if one does give a bad performance. We have specialized so much that the creative instinct in us is being crushed.

"In those leisurely decades the young people would take a buggy ride to a waterfall or wood by the river or some other picturesque spot. There they would eat and sing and sketch and flirt. The most thrilling pastime that the young ladies and their swains indulged in was fencing, with quick-witted, brilliant conversation.

"This machine age keeps us moving so fast that there is little time for all the romantic sentiment of yesterday. The odd part of it is that we used to believe the machines would make it possible for us to enjoy more leisure and more beauty in life. We would have more time for the arts and for romance. We had no idea that it would lead to a terrific mania for overproduction and salesmanship. That we would try to sell each other goods and yet more goods, and accumulate all sorts of possessions. We did not use our leisure and money to go to institutions to learn things or to patronize the arts.

"But we may yet come to it. The depression is giving us plenty of time in which to think. It is possible that we will learn how to use our leisure in the right way.

"And by that time women, having become accustomed to their freedom and their rights, will concentrate on the graceful things of life. They will teach their youngsters to woo with all the old-fashioned frills and ceremonies and to put some imagination and mystery into courtship again. And with their greater knowledge and understanding of the high art of marriage, it is possible that romantic love will in truth live happily ever after."

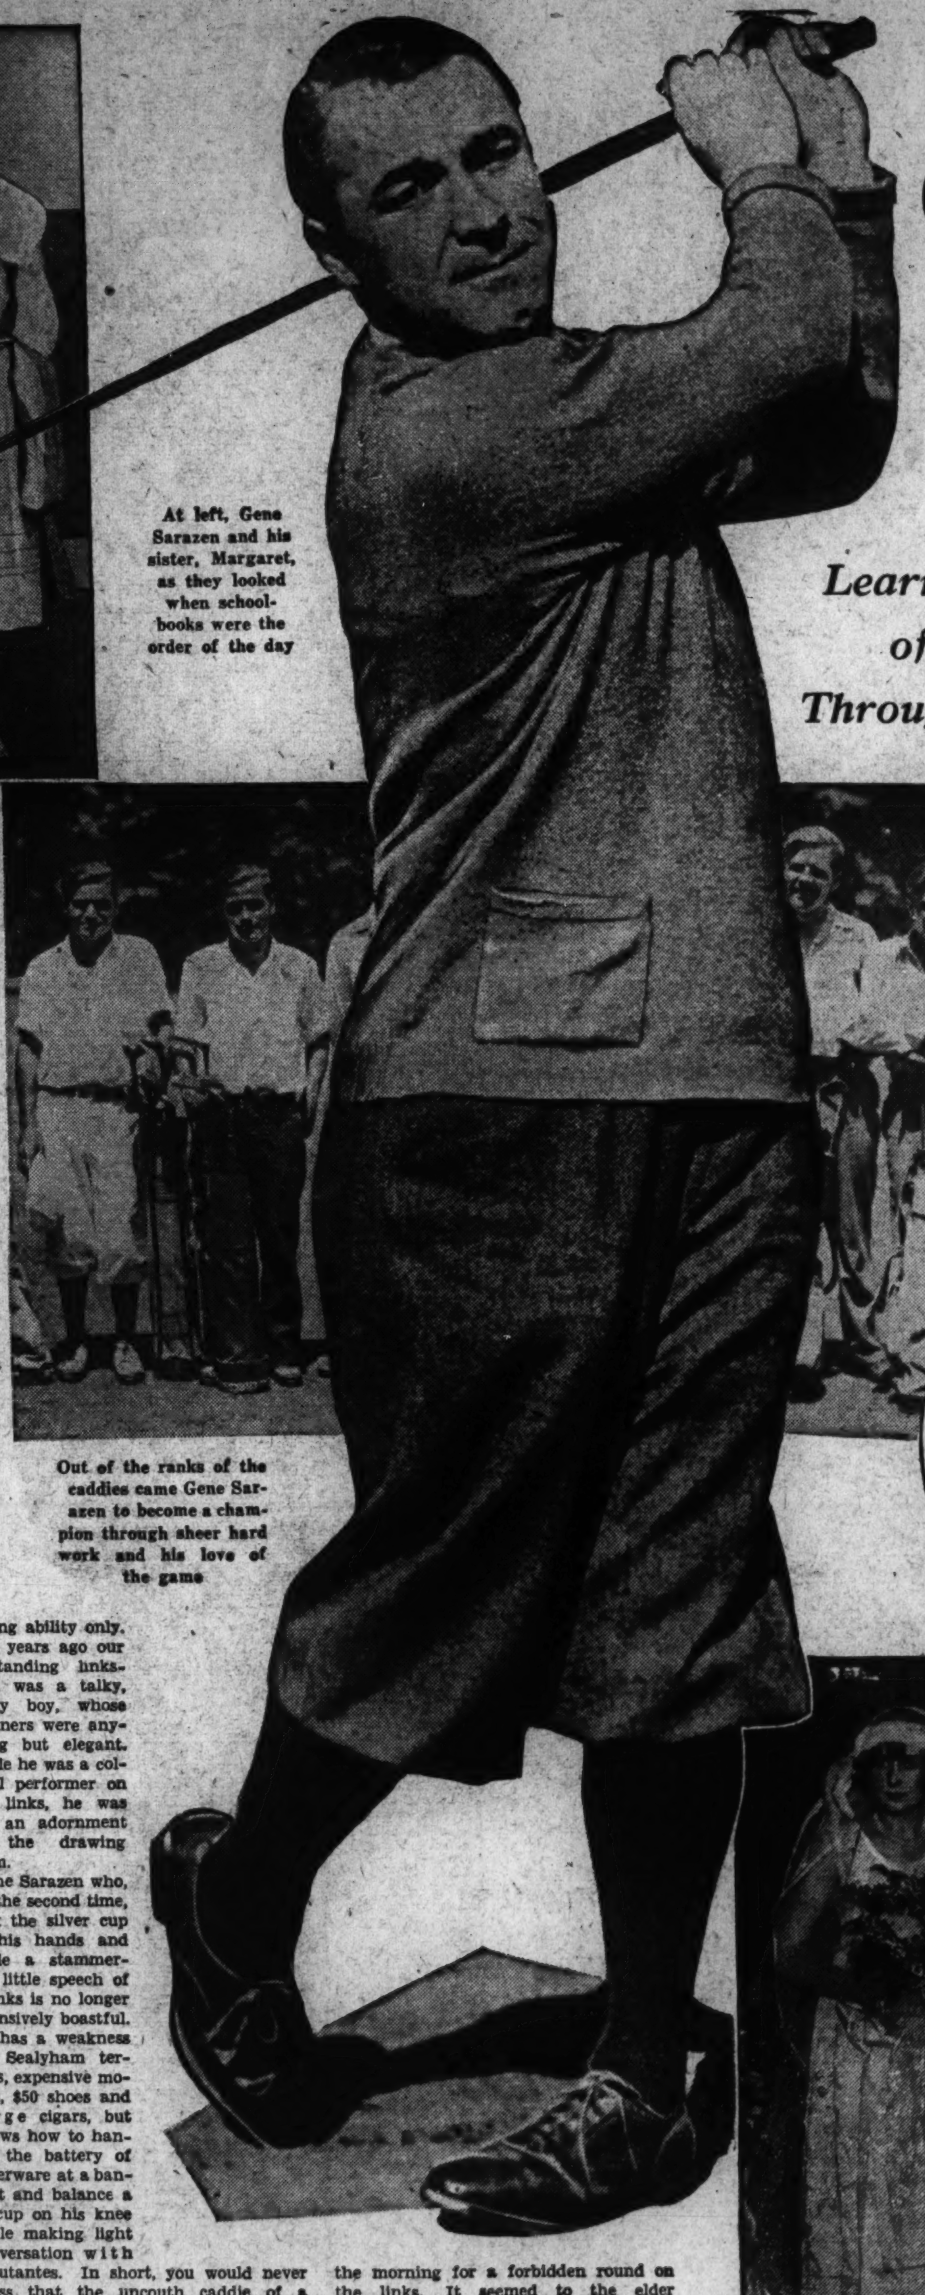
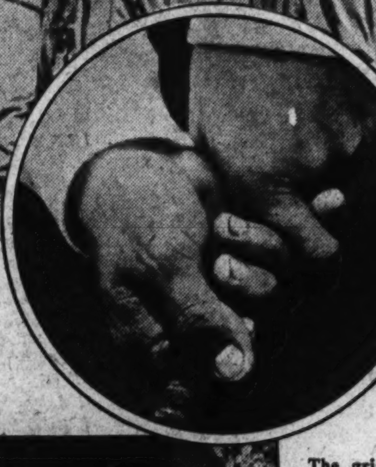
WORLD'S GREATEST GOLFER

Italian Caddie, Saracini Pischando—Gene Sarazen to You—First Learned His Game as a Copyist of the Styles of Stars, Then Stepped to the Throne Through Sheer Confidence in His Own Ability

At left, Gene Sarazen and his sister, Margaret, as they looked when school-books were the order of the day



Out of the ranks of the caddies came Gene Sarazen to become a champion through sheer hard work and his love of the game



The grip used by Gene Sarazen that has made him a noted golfer

The wedding of the smiling golfer to the former Catherine Peck in 1924 was a brilliant affair and preceded a honeymoon to England, where he played in the British open championship of that year

By Jack Kofoed

GOLF is Scotland's gift to humanity, and for many years Scottish and English names were the only ones inscribed in the Blue Book of the game. But there were not enough families named Macdonald and Smith and Macgregor to supply the caddie demand in the swanky clubs of Westchester County, N. Y. Soon scions of Turnesa, Cuici, Manero, Serafin and Pischando were carrying bags over the smooth fairways. It is from the caddie ranks that the great professional golfers are developed, and it was as a caddie that Saracini Pischando, who is headlined in the current sports extras as Gene Sarazen, first learned to differentiate between a spoon and a mashie niblick.

Bobby Jones, Leo Diegel and other technicians say that Sarazen is the greatest golfer in the world. If this be true, his superiority is due more to a tremendous capacity for work and an immense love of the game than to intuitive genius. As an example: Gene practiced seven hours a day before the start of the British open championship, swung a twenty-one-ounce club for twenty minutes and went through a vigorous course of training to reduce his weight.

Work—work—work. There is no golfer in the world who labors so assiduously. Master of all shots, he realizes that the only way he can continue his mastery is to practice.

Behind this labor of love is a confidence that has never been shaken by the many setbacks he has experienced. When Gene married Mary Peck he took her to England and promised he would win the British open as a honeymoon gift. He didn't. Nor did he succeed in seven subsequent trips with his blonde partner. Then, last spring, he left Mary in their Great Neck, L. I., apartment and not only captured that classic tournament, with David Windsor trudging behind, but also set an unbelievable record of 283 for the grueling Prince's course at Sandwich.

SEVERAL weeks later he played in the American championship at the Fresh Meadow Country Club, where he had served as professional for six years. His golf during the first two days hardly rose above the passably mediocre. He was not hitting his shots. The feel of iron and wood and the delicacy of putting touch had flown. But barriers never loom ominously high in Gene's imagination. He is too sure of himself to admit defeat before the last putt is holed.

On Saturday afternoon Phil Perkins, an Englishman, and Bobby Cruickshank, a Scot, finished in a tie with a total of 289. Sarazen, the Italian, needed a 69 to win on that final round, and a 69 under pressure over the long Fresh Meadow layout could be regarded as something in the way of a miracle. Without a hint of expression on his round, tanned face Gene played his way through a noisy, milling gallery of 10,000 people to an impossible 66, and his second national championship of the year.

Ten summers before, Sarazen had paced nervously about the eighteenth green of the Skokie Country Club, trying to appear unconcerned over the fact that he led the field in that open championship. Only old John Black and young Bobby Jones had a reasonable chance of catching him, so if little beads of perspiration trickled down his forehead and he wet his lips frequently, those who watched understood.

He had come out of the Italian section of Rye, N. Y., called, ironically enough, Dublin, and started fooling around with cut-down golf clubs when only 8 years old. One September day, when he was still a little short of 12, he sat on the caddies' bench at Apawamis and heard the astounding news that an ex-caddie named Francis Ouimet had won the open championship. It was the greatest inspiration that had come into his life.

Little Gene told himself that sometime he would equal that feat, and here he was within reaching distance of the championship. He didn't know that Jones had found trouble along the baked fairways, and that old John Black's hopes had gone winging on a hook out of bounds. He heard of it soon enough, and then the great silver cup was in his arms, and he felt that he had achieved all that could be asked of any golfer.

The difference between the Sarazen of Skokie in 1922 and the Sarazen of Fresh Meadow in 1932 is not one of golfing ability only. Ten years ago our outstanding linksman was a talky, cocky boy, whose manners were anything but elegant. While he was a colorful performer on the links, he was not an adornment to the drawing room.

The Sarazen who, for the second time, took the silver cup in his hands and made a stammering little speech of thanks is no longer offensively boastful. He has a weakness for Sealyham terriers, expensive motors, $50 shoes and large cigars, but knows how to handle the battery of silverware at a banquet and balance a teacup on his knee while making light conversation with debutantes. In short, you would never guess that the uncouth caddie of a decade back and the polished young man of today were cut from the same bolt.

There is just as definite a change in the golfing ability of those two who are housed in the same skin. The Sarazen of Skokie had a well-grooved swing about which so coldly technical an expert as John I. Taylor went into rhapsodies. He still has that groove, but now he understands more fully the mechanics of it.

After he won his first championship, Gene felt that he should be able to explain how he did it. He began experimenting. Soon he was at such loose ends that he simply could do nothing right. His game went to pieces, and those who said he was a genius began to believe that he was a nine-day wonder instead. You see, Sarazen had never been taught. He had watched great golfers and imitated their styles. He lacked fundamental knowledge, and when he started to experiment, his lack of knowledge simply caused him to bog down.

It was then his love of work, his curiosity, his willingness to take advice gave him the necessary lift. His faux pas on the links and in the drawing room became fewer. The real Sarazen was emerging from the chrysalis.

GENE'S beginnings in the world of golf were sufficiently humble. His father was a carpenter, who saw golf as the foolish pastime of wasteful folk. He looked sourly on his son's penchant for slipping off at 5 o'clock in the morning for a forbidden round on the links. It seemed to the elder Pischando that a hammer and saw would be more likely to earn a living for Gene than a driver and a putter.

But there was nothing the boy wanted to do but play golf. School bored him, and he never was much of a student during the eight years he attended classes. He was as imitative as a monkey, though, where his interest was aroused, and his superb confidence was already glimmering. When Gene was 11 years old he bet his entire fortune of 50 cents that he could break 90 at Apawamis in a caddie tournament, and the fact that he wound up with 105 created no inhibitions within him.

There were various interludes that had their bearing on his personal but not his golfing life. His father lost all his money. Gene worked in Government houses during the war, since his youth barred him from army service. He carried out those the flu had killed in the Bridgeport Hospital, and bored holes in wooden shell casings in an ammunition factory. All the time he dreamed of golf.

The boy's first job at the business he adored was as club cleaner under George Sparling at the Brooklawn Country Club in Bridgeport, Conn. It was there that he first saw Walter Hagen, and admired the great man from a distance, and told the caddies that some day he would be a greater man than Hagen ever dreamed of being. Secretly he copied Hagen's style.

Sarazen looked forward to winter with horror, since snow and sleet and biting weather made golf difficult. He was 18 when he beat his way South. There was no golfing job for him, so he worked unloading trucks at $3 a day, but wrote home to his folks on the stationery of the most expensive hotel in Miami. His pride was very important to him.

THE following summer he went to work for Ramsay Hunter at Fort Wayne, Ind. He made such a consistent fool of the course that the members chipped in to send him to the open championship at Inverness. But Inverness presented a different problem than Fort Wayne, and Sarazen finished thirtieth. In the fall he played in the Professional Golfers Association championship, and defeated Harry Hampton and Jock Hutchison, but, much to his disgust, was beaten by the thin, nervous little Cyril Walker.

Gene began to see that there was more to high-class competition than hitting a golf ball, but at 19 it is natural to assume that one knows most of the answers.

During the winter of '21-'22, he followed the tournament trail through the South and West, and finished in the money often enough to pay his expenses. He bragged a lot, but his limited ambition was to amass $10,000 and retire. Then he won the open championship, and a real fortune loomed ahead.

Gene had made a magnificent finish in that event, but the Doubting Thomases pointed out that he had not been under real pressure. He had gone his way unattended by a vast gallery. Jones and Black had known definitely what they must beat to win. The kid might not have so much nerve after all.

Sarazen settled that. He fought his way through to the final round of the professional championship at Pelham—and that championship is the most difficult of all to win. The man who opposed him was his boyhood idol, Hagen.

The son of the Italian contractor played brilliantly. He piled up a decisive lead, but with nine holes to go Hagen staged a rally that squared the match on the thirty-sixth hole. They halved the thirty-seventh. And here, said the wiseacres, is where Sarazen blows.

On the second extra hole Walter bashed a terrific drive down the middle of the fairway, and Gene hooked his ball into the rough. If there had been one tiny flaw in the boy's competitive armor, it would have shown up then. After all, Hagen was the greatest professional, and Sarazen should have been awed and disturbed. If he was he didn't show it, for he pitched a perfect mashie shot to within twelve inches of the pin to win that championship and vindication of his intestinal investiture.

THE youngster was in an exceedingly difficult position. Greatness had come upon him too suddenly. He was not equipped for it. He had money when he was unused to money, and publicity was showered upon him when publicity was most likely to turn his head.

But Sarazen came through with his head up. Between 1922 and 1932 he failed to win a national open championship, though most of the big-money tournaments like the $25,000 Agua Caliente and the $15,000 La Gorce fell before him. His golf grew steadily better, and when he married Catherine Mary Peck, who looked enough like Pauline Garon, the movie star, to be a twin, the final touches of his social education were added.

After winning the national open championship in June he signed a contract with Ray McCarthy, which guarantees him $250,000 in the next two years, a sum never even remotely approached by any golf professional.

The little fellow—he stands less than five feet six inches, even though he does weigh 160 pounds—has only one fear, fat. He goes on a training diet frequently, though he does love spaghetti and chicken and all Italian dishes, for that matter. He drinks very little, but smokes ten cigars a day. Contract bridge is his favorite recreation, and he plays it reasonably well, though not so well as Leo Diegel or Wild Bill Mehlhorn, who are bridge champions among the golf professionals.

"NEW FACES!" Growing Cry of MOVIE BARONS

Leading Producers Searching the Studios and Stage for Youngsters Whom They Can Build for Important Roles and Make Them Ready to Follow in the Footsteps of Noted Stars of Today

An ocean voyage made it possible for Dorothy Hale to meet Samuel Goldwyn, who gave her a role opposite Ronald Colman in one of his newest motion pictures

By Alice L. Tildesley

NEW FACES! The phrase tick-tocks through every producer's dreams.

"We must develop new players or next year there'll be none!" cries Carl Laemmle, Jr.

"We have given leading roles to five young girls new to the screen," avers the casting director of Fox Studios. "We need more youngsters with ability."

"New talent is always in demand," declares Jack Warner, "but filling this demand is not so easy. Not one out of each hundred tested ever really gets anywhere in pictures."

"Now, as always, there are opportunities for unknown actors to rise to film fame," Irving Thalberg assures me. "But success in any sphere of art is never easy."

"The public likes change," is Sam Goldwyn's contention. "All the girls I am using in my pictures are unknown. Anna Sten, Ruth Hall, Phyllis Barry, Dorothy Hale, not to mention the seventy-six youthful beauties cast for Eddie Cantor's film.

"Something different, something fresh, something interesting, is what the world looks for. I try to give it to them.

"But see what happens in pictures today: You are in New York, let us say. You go to a theatre and see a girl called Jennie Gay on the screen. She is good and you like her. But you go next night to another theatre and there is Jennie Gay again in another picture. The next two attempts to entertain yourself result in more of Jennie Gay. She's popular, so the studios have been borrowing her back and forth. You see her in four pictures and you're tired of her.

"Too much of a good thing is more than you want.

"I mean to show my four finds to advantage, but not to let you see them so often that they bore you."

ANNA STEN, lovely young Russian, a foreign importation, is being groomed to play the leading role supporting Ronald Colman in his next film. She is taking off Continental poundage and perfecting her English under conscientious instructors.

Ruth Hall was engaged as a show girl for the Cantor picture, but her tests proved so excellent that she was promoted to ingenue lead in the film.

Phyllis Barry is a young English girl whose stage experience was confined to musical comedy, most of it in Australian music halls. She was singing in a Hollywood revue when Mr. Goldwyn saw her, and so vivid was his impression of her that he felt no one else could play the chorus girl in Ronald Colman's current production.

Dorothy Hale, though well known as writer, painter and sculptor, has never set foot on a stage nor faced a motion-picture camera. She met Mr. Goldwyn at a dinner in Havana, where it developed that she and the Goldwyn family were all to sail on the same boat. During the voyage Mr. Goldwyn suggested a screen test for the part of the wife in the Colman film. Dorothy accepted the offer and got the part.

Because "Boots" Mallory happened to step out of an office across the hall when Erich von Stroheim opened his door, this young unknown is playing the lead in Von's new film.

"I saw her and I turned to look at her," explains Von, "and I said to myself, 'Any girl who can make me turn for another look has something!'"

"BOOTS'" real name is Patricia, but when she was small she couldn't manage so long a name. Since she couldn't say "shoes" either, her father taught her to say "boots" and presently "Boots" was the working title.

She came to Hollywood by way of the Follies, as so many other girls have done, but unlike many others, she had a leading role in an important picture before her first month was over.

"It's being in the right place at the right time," explained Hamilton McFadden, director at Fox Studios, expatiating on the subject of film chances for unknowns.

"I used to conduct the Theatre Guild School, and there I discovered Sylvia Sidney and Marguerite Churchill. The moment they walked into my office I knew I had something. I didn't need to watch them work in their classes, because I can recognize the essential thing at first sight.

"To me an actor is a vial. You fill him with color by giving him a part to play. When he is not portraying a character he is empty, colorless, because he could not be a good actor and have too strong a personality of his own.

"The most important quality in success is determination. Those who make up their minds to do something or to get somewhere will succeed—if they don't give up. Looks are important to a girl trying to break into pictures. So is charm. So is talent. But the greatest thing of all is determination.

"The unknown of today has a better chance of breaking into the game than she has had since the talkies upset the industry.

"It's unfair to send out scouts to 'discover' talent. If a girl has sufficient ambition, determination and faith in herself, she'll get out to the market for her talent, and the chances are ten to one she'll succeed over the sister who stays at home and takes it out in wishing.

"I've been trying to find an unknown to play the lead in my picture, but I'm going to have to give it to Ginger Rogers because the demands of the part are beyond the capacity of inexperience."

BESIDES "Boots" Mallory there are Janet Chandler and June Vlasek, Nell O'Day, Irene Ware and Miriam Jordan making up for prominent roles on the Fox lot.

Janet Chandler is doing the leading woman's part in "The Golden West" with no preparation except extra roles and some years of concert dancing.

June Vlasek has been on the stage at intervals since she was 5, and has done one picture before the current "Chandu," in which she and Irene Ware are sharing honors.

Irene is a graduate from Earl Carroll's "Vanities."

Nell O'Day is playing ingenue in Will Rogers' current vehicle.

Miriam Jordan, now working in "Six Hours to Live" with Warner Baxter and John Boles, began her career as a beauty queen of the Wembley Exposition, an all-British Empire trade fair.

To look on Miriam seems to have been to feel the urge to do something for her. It was a stranger who insisted on sending her picture to the exposition. It was the Ranee of Sarawak, wife of the only white Rajah, who saw her sitting in a glass cage of the exposition (penalty of winning the contest — people paid a shilling each to look at her there) and asked her to act in a play written by the Ranee.

Charles Cochran, famous London stage producer, attended a performance of this play and offered Miriam a role in one of his productions. A sort of "house-that-Jack-built" affair.

Al Woods, Broadway producer, saw her in a London play and brought her to New York, where more doors opened without her even troubling to knock, until at length she arrived in Los Angeles with a Broadway company. The first night a Fox executive saw her and asked her to make a test.

"But there's a reason!" she confided mysteriously. "I have a good-luck charm. My mother gave it to me when I was 16. It's a tiny golden bell with six pearls hanging from it by little silver links. It has always brought me luck.

"Two years ago, while I was dancing on shipboard on my way back to England, I lost it, and I had nothing but bad luck until eighteen months later I came over again on the same boat. I'd been dancing with Lord Beaverbrook's son, when we sat down in the veranda cafe. As we talked, my fingers played with the wicker of my chair, found something loose and pulled it off. I thought it a bit of the wicker until I looked down before throwing it away and saw it was the charm!

"I've had nothing but good luck since!"

New faces, please! "In the silent days there were more than 150 stars and featured players," Carl Laemmle, Jr., points out. "Now there are twenty-five or less.

"We can't make stars if the public won't help. No player can be a star without the public's strong support. The public should go to the theatre much as it goes to football games, with the idea of finding new stars; hunting out unknowns for themselves and applauding when the new players do a scene well.

"A player can't get by on a name any more. It's ability that counts. Perhaps it's because I'm young myself that I have supreme confidence in youth. I proved my faith in it when I cast Lew Ayres for the biggest role of the year, when nobody knew him.

"I have just given contracts to four more unknown boys—Theodore Hecht, Earl McCarthy, Carlton KaDell and Noah Beery, Jr. Young Beery's contract is a starring contract for a series of Westerns showing youth of frontier days.

"Our two most promising youngsters are Gloria Stuart and Onslow Stevens. Both came from the Pasadena Community Playhouse. That's a good place to find talent.

"Stevens is eager to work; he'll play extra if there's nothing else available. Even after a big part, he'll step into a bit and like it.

"Tom Brown is a kid from the stage who's making good on the screen. Oh, yes, there's a chance for the unknown today!"

"But don't come to Hollywood thinking the producers are crying for you," is Harold Lloyd's warning.

"There is no very big chance for youth in any line under business conditions today. You must roll your own.

"Sometimes it's chance that gives a youngster a break. That's true in all lines. If you are a young lawyer you may be connected with a case that happens to make the front page of all the papers. It carries you with it, and your future is bright.

"If you are a young doctor you may plug along unnoticed for a long time; or you may be lucky enough to work on a discovery that brings you into the limelight, or perform an operation out of the ordinary that turns attention in your direction. So it is with unknown youngsters in the film world.

"It may happen that a director will look at a crowd of extras and say: 'Give me that fellow—he has the sort of face I need.' The fellow so chosen gets a bit, but perhaps the bit is important to the story and is so handled that it stands out. Then the young man is given better parts and goes on up if he has it in him.

"It's largely luck.

"It isn't often that luck steps in. Yet why should I discourage any one? If it had been possible to discourage me, I shouldn't be here."

IF YOU haven't the natural ability to speak lines you had better give up all idea of success on the talking screen, according to King Vidor, ace director.

"It seems to be something that can't be taught," he says. "The tone-deaf seldom succeed in music, and those who are line-deaf seem unable to overcome the handicap.

"If a youngster is not line-deaf I think he has as good a chance of success now as he ever had. It is more difficult to convey thought in pantomime than in speech, and so it is easier to get by in talkies than it was in silent pictures. At least that is my opinion."

"With thousands of beauties to choose from few are found with screen personality, the natural ability to act and the willingness to work hard," complains Jack Warner.

"Recently we signed seven girls from extra ranks and studio circles. If one of these seven succeeds we'll feel repaid."

"The last year has seen many new personalities rise to prominence on the screen," elaborates Mr. Thalberg. "New actors will continue to rise as long as they have ambition, talent, courage and perseverance.

"In the future I believe that success on the screen will be based on definite talent along acting lines. Talking pictures demand an increase in talent before a player can be a success, so that there are more years of apprenticeship necessary before a player can hope to be discovered. Competition, certainly, grows stronger, but the door of opportunity is unlocked."

RUSSIA NOT A BUGABOO

Says ELMER RICE
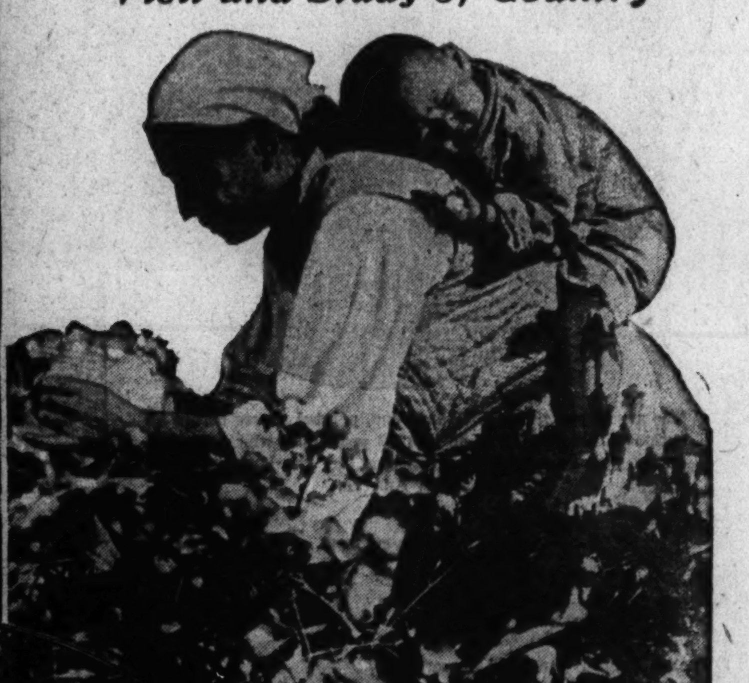
Author-playwright

People of Soviet States Willing to Undergo Present Hardships While Pushing Through the Five-Year Plan, for It Means Greater Social Advancement in the Years to Come, Says American Writer After Extensive Visit and Study of Country

Elmer Rice



A native mother of Kirghiz, Soviet Russia, busily engaged in a cotton field as her baby slumbers on

In an Interview With Carol Bird

A RUSSIA with a mass philosophy, a definite social program, and no unemployment.

This is a brief outline of the Russian picture as it presents itself to the eyes of an American, visiting there with an open and perceptive mind. Elmer Rice, playwright, author of "Counsellor at Law" and other Broadway hits, recently returned to New York with his wife and two children from a tour of Russia, which included a visit to Moscow, a trip down the Volga to Stalingrad, the North Caucasus, Baku, Tiflis, the Black Sea, the Crimea, Odessa and Leningrad.

During his Russian holiday Mr. Rice visited prisons, theatres, collective farms, communal apartment houses, community dining rooms, factories, factory and community nurseries, private homes, restaurants and stores, and therefore had an excellent opportunity of studying various branches of Russian life. He disclaims, however, any profound knowledge of Russian affairs, since he believes that too many tourists form snap judgments of a country based merely on what they have observed during a brief visit to the foreign land.

"WHEN I arrived in Russia I decided that I would try to view it from the Russian slant, not from the American," said Mr. Rice. "American travelers are inclined to be provincial, and to expect small replicas of their own country when they adventure into new lands. They tend to judge a foreign country from American standards. I made up my mind I would not do this. For example: Americans are always horrified when they note the living conditions of Russians. Accustomed as they are at home to living in seven or eight room houses, they are shocked when they see a whole Russian family dwelling in one room. And the average Russian family is larger than the American family, for Russians favor big families. If there is a decline in the birth rate at present it is due to housing conditions. But what the American does not take into consideration is that the Russian would not live in the crowded fashion that he does but for the fact that there is a terrific housing shortage in Russia, particularly in Moscow, due to the swift increase in population. This results in very little privacy for any one; but then, Russians have never been accustomed to privacy as we know it. Russians are far more gregarious than Americans; they like mass living and mass activities.

"Americans are sure to grumble when, traveling in foreign countries, they are deprived of the comforts and luxuries they know at home. You cannot be a world traveler and not know discomfort. Since these grumblers have everything that suits their tastes at home, they ought not venture forth to sample what other lands have to offer. If they think everything is ideal at home they should remain there.

"I was particularly impressed by two things in Russia, and they were both in striking contrast to America. First, there is no unemployment in Russia. Everybody works, even most of the married women. Second, the Soviet Union has a social program which America totally lacks. Russia knows exactly what it wants to do. It has its social structure thoroughly planned. No one in power in America has any real program, and the result is that when we get into a predicament such as our present one, we do not know how to get out of it, despite the fact that we have everything over here with which to accomplish any desired end.

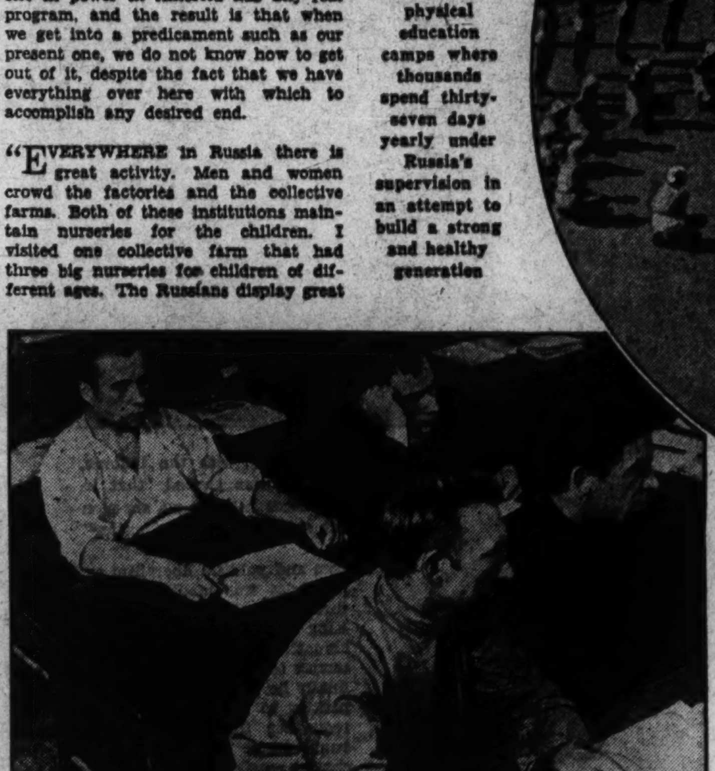
"EVERYWHERE in Russia there is great activity. Men and women crowd the factories and the collective farms. Both of these institutions maintain nurseries for the children. I visited one collective farm that had three big nurseries for children of different ages. The Russians display great intelligence in their child welfare and educational programs. All factory workers get their principal meals at their places of employment, and there are also what are called 'factory kitchens' in Russia, where 50,000 or more meals are prepared each day and delivered to the different factories. Some of the factories have individual dining rooms on the premises, where whole families of workers take their meals.



Prisoners in a model institution near Moscow at their daily lessons in reading and writing. Uniforms are not used to distinguish the inmates

"We visited a community dwelling or apartment house. It was called 'a communal house.' This corresponded somewhat to our attempt at co-operative housing, except for the fact that workers get everything very much more cheaply than apartment house dwellers do in America, and there are no profits for any private owner. They had a central dining room, a central sitting room and library, a place where the tenants were provided with music and other entertainment, and also an information service for mothers, where they were given medical advice. The food served in these communal dining rooms cost about fifty kopeks a meal. According to the rate of exchange this would amount to about 25 cents; actually it is not nearly this much.

"WHAT sort of food does one get in Russia? Well, at present there is a food shortage, in fact, a shortage of clothing—of everything. The Five-Year Plan has demanded a concentration on heavy industries, motors, power plants, road building, factories, engineering projects and other heavy industries so that the production of consumable goods, such as clothes and like necessities, has been neglected. That is why Russia is a potential, unlimited market for American manufactured goods, and incidentally a powerful argument for American recognition of Russia. You have 160,000,000 people who are all in need of consumable products, a huge market for the things of which we have a surplus. Despite all the misrepresentation about Russians and their attitude toward the United States, I found them extremely friendly toward Americans. They were sympathetic, cordial and frankly eager to win our friendship.

"WE HEAR a great deal about Russian marriage—or lack of it—and easy divorce. But how about American divorce mills? Americans have shown their capacity for severing marital bonds and taking on numerous different mates over a short period of years. Russians look upon marriage in a different way than Americans do, but then Russians are, by temperament, background and breeding, different in every way from us. Marriage to the Russian is merely a statistical matter, one of registration; they do not endow it with the importance that we do. I visited a marriage registration bureau in Moscow, and chanced to be there when a middle-aged couple came in to register their marriage. Something was wrong with the bride's passport, and so the girl in charge refused to give them a certificate. The man was enraged and argued volubly, but the woman merely shrugged. 'What does it matter?' she said. 'We have already been living together for twelve years.'

"People who are attracted to each other in Russia simply live together, and there is no stigma attached to such an alliance, nor are the children of such a union stigmatised because their parents have not visited the marriage registry office. They are extremely realistic in Russia so far as marriage and many other matters are concerned. And this brings me to the Russian philosophy, the Russian's outlook on life in general.

"Russians are filled with vitality and enthusiasm. We think of the Russian temperament as one thick with gloom, and the Russian as one who hugs sadness to him, in a self-chosen martyrdom. But present-day Russians are not like this. They think sadness belongs to the past.

"It is true that Russian literature has always depicted the Russian as one of dour mien, sad, unhappy. But today Russians do not think much of Turgeniev and Dostoievsky, so much respected by the intelligentsia of the nineteenth century. They think of them as great writers, but they do not believe their writings apply to themselves now. The attitude of the present-day Russian is against introspection and preoccupation with individual problems. They are against mysticism. Communism is a religion to them. It has supplanted the orthodox religion.

"AS FOR the young Communist, he is against drinking and smoking and general self-indulgence. The girls do not use cosmetics. They believe that they should employ their entire energies toward the betterment of the State. Individual beautification is a time-waster and an unimportant pastime, they believe, now that their eyes are focused on an ideal. You ask me if this mass production and mass philosophy is an ideal way of living not merely for the mediocre but for the man or woman of unusual mental equipment and abilities as well.

"The Soviet Government believes in fostering genius. It is all for the recognition of individual effort. It does everything to encourage artists, who make out very well if, of course, they favor Communism and its basic principles. If they do not they have little chance in Russia. Those who accept Communism are very well off, indeed, and everything is done to encourage art and the artist.

"There is even piece work for the factory and farm worker, so that the fellow who does the best work is rewarded accordingly.

"The theatre is flourishing in Russia and, naturally, I was particularly interested in this phase of the Russian national life. Theatres are always filled, and it is difficult to secure tickets for them. Great enthusiasm is displayed. I was told that even before the Revolution the theatre was always very popular in Russia, but today the theatre, in a large measure, has taken the place of religion; it provides an emotional outlet for the former churchgoer. Most of the plays are propaganda for Communism, and the people get the same emotional reaction, experience the same spiritual exaltation that people in other countries do through going to church. Some of the actors and singers get very good pay, and the cost of admission to all forms of entertainment is very low to the worker.

"I WONDERED how prisoners were treated in Russia, and so made a point of visiting a women's prison. It was run like a factory. It actually was a textile factory, where they made cheap cotton shawls. There were no guards in the strict sense of that term, but two women prisoners, armed with pistols, served in this capacity. There was a club in the prison, a recreation center, a theatre, motion pictures, a nursery for the prisoners' children, technical classes and classes for illiterates. Many of the prisoners are illiterate when they arrive, but when they leave they can at least read and write.

"When discharged, there is no stigma attached to men and women who have served terms in Russia. They have the right to work everywhere, and they are placed in jobs when they leave prison. What is more, each prisoner is paid for his work and is given a week's vacation each year, when he is allowed to depart from the jail, unaccompanied, to go and visit his home and family. They are permitted to go on trust, and they always return.

"The maximum sentence for any non-political crime in Russia is ten years, and this includes the crime of murder. This sentence is reduced by good behavior, and every two working days are considered as three, so that this system further reduces the length of time the prisoner must serve."

WILLIAM PENN a Great Builder

Principles of Liberty in Government and Religion Set Up in the Laws of the Colony He Established Later Became Fundamentals in the Constitution of the United States and Many Individual States

By Frank Carlyn

TO BE one of the most important founders of the greatest nation on earth, yet remain in more or less obscurity while lesser lights achieve to the Hall of Fame, has been the fate of one William Penn. A rarely sung statesman and champion of democracy far beyond his times, Penn introduced into America ideas for economic and religious freedom, the traces of which can be seen in the Constitution of the United States and its liberal mode of government to this day. His founding of Philadelphia, the third largest city in the country, may be considered but a minor achievement; his colonizing and governing of Pennsylvania, whose area equals that of England, may be judged in a similar light, but his influence for liberty and the freedom of thought, speech and press has too widely affected the world to pass unheeded.

It is a fitting coincidence that the year which sees the 200th anniversary of the birth of the "Father of Our Country" should also see the 250th anniversary of the first arrival in American waters of the foremost "Founder of Our Country." For as such is William Penn seen by Albert Cook Myers, author, historian and international authority on the Quaker pioneer, and as such he will be honored on October 24 by the United States and those peoples of other lands which have also profited by his democratic principles.

"WILLIAM PENN, Proprietor and Governor of the Province of Pennsylvania, was the builder of three great Commonwealths, keystone provinces in the arch of the American Colonies," said Dr. Myers. "New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware were founded and developed in their formative years under his ideas, governmentally and in their more subtle underlying social and economic aspects. These States were the means of transmitting Penn's ideals as exemplified in practice to other States and to the Nation as a whole, not only as makers of constitutions but peculiarly as disseminating hives of population which carried these transforming Penn influences of democracy and progress to the up-country of the South and to the West and so into the heart of the Nation.

"These ideas have reacted upon England and Europe. It may be said with truth that Penn stands forth as the greatest of the early American founders. His life and his thought have entered into the bone and sinew of England and America and, indeed, into that of all the world.

"Dr. Edward Channing, professor of history at Harvard University, has said that William Penn was one of the greatest Englishmen of the seventeenth century, of the century of Shakespeare and Milton, of Sir Edward Coke and Matthew Hale.

"One of the most illustrious of Englishmen, Penn was not only a great courtier and a statesman but was also a philanthropist and a constructive reformer as well. He upheld the rights of Englishmen. He interceded for and relieved the distressed and persecuted for conscience's sake. He helped worthy and useful men in their undertakings. He was a great leader of a religion that has profoundly affected the thought of the world, as a minister of his sect advocating peace principles and inward spiritual worship. He was an enlightened and farsighted lawgiver and maker of Constitutions. His ideas and practices in economics and religious freedom have reacted to liberalize the whole world. Some of his ideas on these vital subjects of successful national government have been handed down to us through our own Constitution."

Dr. Myers' opinion of Penn's great work in the rearing of the American national structure has evolved from a lifelong study of the great Quaker and his works. He proposes to publish the "Complete Works of William Penn 1680-1712," including what Penn wrote and also the great founder's life annals.

Penn in treaty with the Indians, in which it was agreed "that in all differences between us, six men on each side shall end the matter"

"ALTHOUGH William Penn in my estimation is the greatest of all founders of the United States, he has been given little national recognition. His statue is not even in the Hall of Fame, although men who have done much less for this country appear there," said Dr. Myers.

"Penn's life is a curious mingling of peace and war, of pioneer spirit and Quaker quietness, a life having much of poverty amid plenty, of persecution, ingratitude, even prison, but through it all one aim followed to a successful conclusion: the right of the people to freedom of conscience and government and to economic opportunity. Upon these principles and for these principles was our Nation founded.

"William Penn was born in the shadow of the Tower of London in 1644. His father was an admiral in the navy under Cromwell and Charles II and sought to train his son in his footsteps. But William had different ideas. As a youth at Oxford University the religious vestments which students were forced to wear under the King's orders irked him.

"Penn's connection with the New World began in 1675. The Quakers, whose leaders for years had been on the lookout for a home of refuge in the New World, first became directly concerned in the founding of colonies there in the year 1673-1674, when two of their number, John Fenwick and Edward Byllynge, purchased the tract of West Jersey. A dispute over ownership of certain sites arising between Fenwick and Byllynge, they called upon Penn, who had become one of the foremost Quakers in England, to settle the row.

"The founding of the Province of Pennsylvania was the direct result of Penn's active participation in the management of the affairs of the New Jersey settlements. He had thus become fully acquainted with the conditions and possibilities not only of the latter region but of the whole domain of the English America of that day, and particularly of that portion of it contiguous to West Jersey on the west side of the Delaware.

"A keen desire had grown up in him to plant in the New World a colony all his own, where he might exemplify his altruistic ideals of the government and development of such a settlement and establish a democracy, under his paternal care, which, while essentially Quaker in character, would nevertheless attract other desirable European immigrants seeking religious freedom and economic opportunity. Along with these great purposes, but subordinate to them, William Penn as an Englishman of rank and influence in the realm, with the traditions of his class, had also a concern for his material interests and for the perpetuity of an estate for his family.

"The realization of his dreams of a Commonwealth having religious freedom and political liberalism as its basic principles was made virtually possible through a claim of $75,000 which the King owed his father and which he as his father's heir demanded. Repeated attempts to recover the money failed and finally he made the debt a basis for a petition to King Charles in June, 1680, requesting the grant of the Pennsylvania tract. On March 4, 1681, the charter received the royal signature and Penn was duly vested with a great domain nearly as large as England itself.

"Early the next month Penn appointed his cousin, Captain William Markham, to serve as Deputy Governor of the tract and sent him over with instructions to call a council to receive the allegiance of the people, to settle boundaries, to treat with the Indians for their lands, to survey and distribute lands and to keep the peace. Penn himself set about the preparation of a series of immigration pamphlets to apprise the prospective settlers of the benefits of the land.

"ALTHOUGH the King had named the tract Pennsylvania in honor of Penn's father, the Quaker sought to have the name changed for fear it would later be misunderstood and looked upon not as a tribute to his father but as vainglory for himself. Penn wanted the territory called New Wales and when this was refused suggested Sylvania. The Penn was added to this without his consent and, although he appealed to the King, the name Pennsylvania stood.

"Journeying between the two great English cities of the day, London and Bristol, Penn disposed of more than 300,000 acres of unlocated lands in amounts of from 10,000 to 250 acres, to about 250 persons. These grantees, who were called First Purchasers with special privileges as to the choice of allotment, were largely well-to-do Quakers of Southern England. In October, 1681, the Proprietor sent over three Commissioners to assist Governor Markham in the work of organizing the colony, especially with respect to laying out of grants of land and to the choice of a site for the capital city. Along with the Commissioners went Penn's advance guard of immigrants, one group sailing from London and the other from Bristol.

"PENN embarked for the New World on his Holy Experiment, which spelled so much for the present nation, on August 30, 1682, at Deal. On October 24, 1682, his ship, the Welcome, Robert Greenway, master, arrived in American waters. It anchored before the little town of Newcastle on October 27 and the next day Penn made a ceremonious landing, being greeted with joyous acclamations by the varied inhabitants.

"I do not know just when Penn came to the site of Philadelphia, but it was shortly after his arrival in America. We do know that at the time there was only one building on the town site, the Blue Anchor Inn, a wooden building, which stood 146 feet north of Dock Creek in the middle of what is now Front street, near to the Blue Anchor Landing Place.

"In the summer of 1683 Penn is supposed to have consummated three land sales from the Indians. It was one of these land sales or treaties which Benjamin West has immortalized in his painting, 'Penn's Treaty With the Indians.' This famous treaty, a somewhat uncertain tradition, is supposed to have taken place under a great elm at Shackamaxon, in that part of the City of Philadelphia now known as Kensington. Penn's purchase of the land he used from the Indians, even though the rights to the land had been deeded to him by the King, served to cement his friendship with the aborigines.

"After almost two years, 1682-1684, spent in establishing his colony in the New World, Penn returned to England to settle the boundary dispute with Maryland. A series of political events, during which the throne of England changed hands and he was imprisoned, delayed his return to the new country. At one time his governorship was taken away from him, only to be restored in 1694 Five years later, after an absence of seventeen years, Penn returned to his adopted land.

"Again he stayed two years, 1699-1701, making his city home in the Slate Roof House at 2d and Sansom streets, Philadelphia, and his country residence at Pennsbury House, his manor at Pennsbury, on the banks of the Delaware, almost opposite Bordentown, N. J.

"After Penn returned to England efforts were made to return the several proprietory Governments to the Crown. Later a false claim was made upon him by Philip Ford, his English steward, and rather than pay an unjust debt, he went to prison for nine months. In 1712 a stroke of paralysis affected his mind and in 1718 a great founder of the American Nation passed away at his residence at Ruscombe, in Berkshire, but not before the seeds of liberty and toleration he had planted took root and prepared the land for its battle of independence little more than a half century later."

ALL'S WELL

By Helen St. Bernard

Love Finds a Way to Bring a Brilliant Young Surgeon Back to His Sense of Duty and Peter Finds Her Reward, Once She Decides to Act

MONA PETERQUINN tried to smile into the mirror as she adjusted the ridiculous little starched cap atop the mass of copper-colored curls that refused to lie flat to her head like the other nurses. But the smile did not come. Her lips twisted in the effort and the reflection before her was misted. She blew her nose and gave a vicious kick to the bedroom slipper that lay on the floor. It was 6:45 and she was to be in the dining room at 7 for breakfast.

"If I could go without breakfast I wouldn't have to see him, but * * * Oh, well, might as well get used to seeing him every day. I have another eighteen months before I launch out as a real, honest-to-goodness nurse, and I'll * * * just have to get used to it!"

She straightened her shoulders as she turned away from the mirror. Down the long corridor, swarming with other blue and white clad girls with ridiculous starched caps atop their heads ready for the day's duties; stifled laughter, young voices, raillery.

"Mornin', Peter darling," yawned Marion Cox. "You look as though you hadn't slept a wink! Out late with Dr. Hobart, weren't you?"

Mona busied herself with the elevator door.

"'Fess up, Peter," persisted Marion. "To have the very nicest and cleverest and handsomest doctor in the whole outfit in love with you, taking you out in a spiffy car and all that. * * * Oh, for curly red hair and violet-blue eyes and white skin," and Marion sighed. "Where did you go last night? Did you dance with the divine Hobo or to a movie, or where?"

"Who wants to know?" challenged Mona Peterquinn.

Last night she had lain on her bed, a piece of note paper wadded into her hand and had cried until long past midnight. And dawn, creeping through the eastern window, had found her still awake. Last night was Thursday * * * but Hobo had written her a note, the second in the week.

She lingered behind the other nurses as they surged into the dining room. Hobo would be at the table reserved for doctors and internes at the far end, and there would be calling back and forth. * * *

And then behind her: "Hello, Peter. All's well?"

Dr. Glenn Hobart, his fine, young face freshly shaven, a bit of powder clinging to his chin, immaculate in white to the tips of his shoes, smiling * * * Hobo was always smiling.

"All's well, Hobo."

NOT a word about last night. Not a word about the brief note that had been slipped under her door just as she was about to don her warm tweed coat with the fox collar and the blue wool beret that matched her eyes: ready for their usual drive along the lake shore. She turned toward the table occupied by the junior nurses.

"Ain't love grand?" whispered Marion. "And isn't he—precious? Just how did you do it, Peter? Tell us * * *"

"Don't be silly, Coxie. Hobo and I have been brought up together. We lived neighbors for years, until the bottom dropped out of the stock market and the Peterquinn family moved into a $40-a-month flat."

"But the Prince remains true to his little Cinderella," laughed Marion over her orange juice. "But how could he help but be true to you? Dr. Mead said yesterday that if you ever as much as smiled in his direction * * *"

"Hobo and I are old friends," repeated Mona insistently. "We have always known each other, it seems."

"Well, you had better watch out for that blonde girl who drives the sporty roadster. She has been here three times this week just as he went off duty."

And this morning out there in the corridor he had said, "All's well," and she had tried to smile as she replied, "All's well * * *"

That had started the year that Glenn was 18 and she was 16; when they had been spending the summer at the Cape, Glenn at the splendid, big, summer home of his aunt and Mona with her mother at the hotel. The Peterquinns and Hobarts usually spent their summers at the same resort, and Glenn and Mona had gone on an all-day cruise on a funny old steam tug with a group of other young people. A terrific storm had arisen that tossed the boat on the waves like a toy, and he had held her close as they stood bracing themselves against the batter of the waves, and then finally the sonorous voice of the captain, "All's well," as the friendly shore loomed up through the driving storm.

"All's well * * *" Hobo had whispered to her, his wet cheek against hers. "All's well, Peter, and always will be for you and me. Gee, you're a brave kid."

And she had even answered, "All's well," that terrible morning two years ago when Arnold Peterquinn, afraid to face the future, had chosen the easiest way out, the day after the Wall Street market debacle. It had been "All's well," too, when Peter stood beside her mother at the auction sale of their beautiful home and furnishings, and Hobo and his mother smiled at them across the long room. It had been "All's well" when they had moved into a small apartment and Hobo had come to see them the first night and had helped hang pictures.

He had entered the hospital when he had been graduated from college, and it was at his suggestion that Mona had decided to become a nurse when it was necessary she decide on her lifework.

"You'll be a corking good one, Peter," he had said. "Just a twinkle out of those blue eyes of yours and the sickest of them will be doing the hornpipe."

Mrs. Peterquinn had gone to live with her widowed sister and Mona had donned the probationer's uniform, and there had been Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday nights with Hobo; long drives in his scarlet roadster, movies and dances, when she would wear the green chiffon dress that he said made her look like a nymph, and they would forget the sick and the unhappy; forget old Mrs. Grayson, who persisted in calling Hobo "Dr. Norbert" and Peter "Miss Quinn"; forget the long hours and the grueling tasks; forget that tragedy following the stock market crash; forget everything in happy companionship.

BUT Marilyn Leigh had come back from two years at a European school. Her father was president of a rubber company and the Leigh home was the second one from the big gray-stone house that had been the Peterquinn residence on the lake shore.

Marilyn was tall and slender and golden-haired. She drove a long, low sports car, and just the second day after her return she had parked her car before the hospital and Peter had heard her talking down the corridor with Hobo.

"You just must come, Glenn. I drove all the way down here to ask you. It's going to be a gorgeous party."

Of course, Hobo had gone to the party. It was the month of his night duty, but arrangements were made with Dr. Craig to take over his work. And because he worked extra hours to make up for it, he did not have the chance to tell Peter about it for two days.

It had been a gorgeous affair. * * * More than a hundred guests, with dancing on the lawn on a specially constructed dance floor, and Marilyn was sure a beauty, and could she dance! And there had been a French celebrity there, a Monsieur Chauvette, who certainly was keen about Marilyn. She said his people owned a chateau down near Bordeaux that dated back to the twelfth century, and she had spent a holiday there and had met a lot of Dukes and Counts.

Peter had listened attentively and nodded and tried to smile. Then she had reminded him that Mrs. Grayson always expected him directly after breakfast, and he had yawned and said:

"Tell the old lady she will have to wait this morning. I'm too darned tired to go up and listen to her talk about gallstones. She's got to have an operation sooner or later, and why the dickens won't she let us do it now and get it over with? Likes being an invalid and getting attention, I guess."

AND little old Mrs. Grayson had raised up in her pillows as Peter came into her room that morning and had said sharply:

"Where is Dr. Norbert? He always comes in by 8, and for the last two mornings he has not come near me until after 9."

"Busy, Mrs. Grayson," Peter had said cheerily. "But he will be coming along soon, so let's get all washed up and that beautiful lace cap on and your prettiest bed jacket * * *"

"Hmm! It's you that should be getting prettied up when that boy comes around, Miss Quinn. I'm not blind! I've seen those smiles that pass back and forth. You're in love with Dr. Norbert, that's what!"

"Old friends," Mona said quickly. "Known each other all our lives."

"That boy has a future. Dr. Blackwell tells me he will be one of the finest surgeons in the country one of these days. Is a born one! That is why he is going to do my operation when the time comes and no one else. I took to that boy the first time I laid eyes on him and have all the faith in the world in him. I'll never consent to any of the rest of them doing it."

Every one took to Hobo when they first saw him, meditated Peter, as she deftly washed the old lady's thin arms and shoulders. Old Mr. Keane always wanted him in attendance, and little toothless Bobby White would refuse to take his medicine unless it was administered by Hobo with the usual jesting and laughter. Every one loved Hobo. * * * She drew a long breath. Dear God, how she loved him! There would never be any one else but Hobo. She had loved him always, and now * * * she winked to keep back the tears.

"And you—you are going to take care of me, too," continued the old lady emphatically. "Those little hands make me quiet. I won't have another one of those nurses around me!"

"But, Mrs. Grayson, I am not a graduate nurse. They will assign the lovely Miss Bennett or Miss Watson to you * * *"

"They will assign who I ask for!" snapped the invalid. "It's my money that's paying for it, and you are—going to—be my nurse! I guess I know who I want around me, after having been here three weeks, nearly four!"

"There!" And Peter slipped a big pillow back of the old lady. "There you are, all ready for the doctor, and he'll tell you that you look 16. Not a day older."

"Pouf!" And the old lady beamed as the door opened and Hobo came in.

Peter glanced up at Hobo and smiled. She noticed there were dark lines under his eyes and he looked tired. After a few minutes he left the room.

HOBO was to leave the hospital the following year. He had specialized in surgery, and he was going to Vienna for post-graduate work. He had talked a great deal about it when they were together. It meant so much to him. In those long-ago days he had always said he was going to be a doctor and make folks well. He studied books on anatomy and surgery. And Peter would put her hands over her ears when he started telling the gruesome details, and then he would laugh and take her hands in his and they would race down the beach, her red curls flying in the wind.

Almost daily now Marilyn's car was parked before the hospital and Marilyn's high-pitched voice was heard in the corridor. Just the third day after her arrival from Europe Hobo had gone out with her, very handsome in his gray tweed golf knickers and sweater, his golf bag over his shoulder. It was his afternoon off and Marilyn had arrived just as he was through.

And when Peter was through duty that day she had locked her door and curled up in a chair before the window that looked down on the boulevard that led to the country club and had watched for their return. But they did not come back for dinner. Hobo was to go on duty at midnight, and it was 11:30 when the roadster drew up beneath the street light and he had jumped out; had lingered a moment to talk to his companion and then was running up the hospital steps, while a white-faced, curly-headed girl dropped her face in her arms folded along the window-sill and had cried.

He had talked a great deal about Marilyn and her speedboat and the Leigh yacht that next night when they had gone to a movie in the next block to the hospital. She had hoped to go for a ride in the cool breezes along the lake shore, but he was tired, he had said * * * and his head nodded in the darkness of the theatre.

That was last week. And this week it had been worse. It had culminated last night with the note shoved under her door just as she was about to go to meet him in front of the nurses' dormitory, where he always waited for her, a note hurriedly written:

"Dear Peter—Can't make it tonight. Something has come up and I've got to hustle. You don't care, do you? See you tomorrow. All's well. * * * Hobo."

"All's well," she had sobbed in the center of her bed. "All's well * * * nothing will be all well again. And I love him so. I love him better than life. Please, oh, please, dear God, make everything all well again."

At luncheon Marion Cox had whispered over her salad:

"The Old Man" was Dr. Blackwell, head of the staff. Peter looked up quickly. She had been busy all morning and had not seen him since he had called out, "All's well," down the corridor.

"There, there, darling, don't be alarmed. It will be all right. Your handsome Hobo is Dr. Blackwell's pet and the Old Man is set on making him one of the greatest surgeons in the country. But it seems he is a trifle weary-eyed this morning and forgot about Miss Davis' appendicitis operation that he was to assist the Old Man with, and when he was urgently needed in the operating room he was out talking to that Miss Leigh in her car."

Marion turned her attention to her luncheon. "That young man is just plain spoiled! You'll have a hard time unspoiling him, Peter."

Hobo was spoiled. He rebelled at jurisdiction and discipline because he had never known it, and it was not the first time he had been called into Dr. Blackwell's office for infringement of rules. He had laughed just last night when he told her the Old Man had told him once more that the hospital could get along without him. But in spite of it all Hobo's future was brilliantly prophesied.

"Peter, eat your lunch!" commanded Marion. "You haven't eaten a bite since I told you you would have a hard time reforming Hobo. Maybe it won't be so bad," and Marion laughed. "If a person loves somebody, he should be ready to do anything for her."

That was right. If a person loved somebody * * * and she loved Hobo. Oh, how she loved him! Did it mean she must love him enough to give him up; to give him to Marilyn Leigh, and to that life composed of yachts and speedboats and motors, and dancing and wealth? If—he was happier, so?

SHE was sitting at a floor desk late that afternoon finishing her daily report when Dr. Reynolds passed with Dr. Craig.

"And it means that I will have to stay on duty until 2 or 3 in the morning while Hobart plays with his rich friends," Dr. Craig was saying. "It's the second time in two weeks he has done it * * * but it seems there is a party on board Leigh's yacht tonight for some foreign celebrity who is leaving for his native shores soon and Hobart is set on going. The Leigh girl was with him this morning and she pleaded so hard for me to relieve him for four or five extra hours I couldn't refuse. Hobart is a darned good scout and would do the same for me. * * *"

Peter sat up straighter in her chair as they passed. Their voices were receding into the distance, but Dr. Reynolds' voice came back to her:

"Well, don't let the Old Man know it. He told Hobart just today that hours had to be kept. And a few more things that ought to have a lasting effect after he stood out there and talked with Miss Leigh while that operation was going on. * * *"

Up to her room when she was through * * * bolting the door * * * flinging herself in the middle of her bed.

"I'm not eating tonight, Coxie. Not hungry."

"Peter, unlock this door this instant!"

"Peter, your voice sounds funny."

"Perhaps, I caught little Johnny Burns' cold. * * *"

A picture of Hobo and her standing in the hospital patio; Hobo in his white suit, her in her first uniform.

"Peter, darling. * * *"

"Run away, Coxie. I'm not dressed. * * * I'm not eating. * * * I'm not—anything!"

Darkness crept into the little room and still she lay there. Life was to go on without Hobo? After all these years, when he had been so near and dear?

Eight o'clock * * * nine o'clock. She arose wearily and pulled the light on, over her dresser, and stood there for a brief moment, her hands pressed to her cheeks.

A peremptory rap at her door. It was not Marion's, nor any of the other girls. She knew their particular raps.

"Yes?"

"Miss Peterquinn, it is I—Miss Stanley."

Miss Stanley, the head nurse! "Lady Rubberheels" they all called her, due to the quiet manner in which she slipped up on them unawares.

Peter unlocked the door.

"I am glad you are not in bed, Peterquinn. Mrs. Grayson has taken a sudden turn and an operation must be performed before the night is over. And she is calling for you."

An operation must be performed, and Hobo was to do the operating! And Hobo was on Leigh's yacht at a party!

"Right away, Miss Stanley. I'll come."

"She absolutely refuses to let any one touch her, and we tried to tell her you had been on duty all day."

The head nurse's voice was unusually kind.

"I'm coming, Miss Stanley."

Smoothing back her hair beneath the little starched cap, and then running down the hall to Mrs. Grayson's room, trying to think. Dr. Reynolds had said the Old Man must not know—and Hobo would not return until 3 or 4 o'clock, perhaps later. Peter knew the time the Leigh parties broke up.

MRS. GRAYSON, writhing in pain, her wrinkled old hands motioning for Peter to come nearer * * * and a smile flashed across the wrinkled face as the girl bent over her.

"I knew you'd come. I guess I've got to go through with it now. But with Dr. Norbert doing the operating, I'm not worrying. But they won't get me to take one sniff of that ether until both you and the doctor are standing right along side of me. They're not putting anything over on me!"

It was ten minutes to 10 by her wrist watch. Miss Stanley stood by watching as Peter deftly smoothed back the pillows, arranged the pain-racked little body in a more comfortable position and patted the old lady's hand.

And over the bed toward the head nurse, she flashed a message and Miss Stanley nodded * * * to dull the pain and keep the old lady quiet until time for the operation. The old face relaxed and Peter stood by waiting for her to close her eyes. How slow she was * * * five minutes to 10 * * * then three * * * and then 10 o'clock, exactly.

Miss Stanley followed her into the hall. "That operation should be performed at once!"

"Dr. Hobart does not come on duty until 12. But if you will have some one watch by her, I'll * * * go get him!"

"You know where he is, Peterquinn?"

Peter nodded, unable to trust her voice.

"Then Miss Rose will take your place. It is hers, anyway, but Mrs. Grayson refused to allow her to do anything for her. It is a shame after your long hard day, my dear, but the effect you had on her was wonderful."

Up to her room on flying feet—snatching her red lined cape from its nail, picking up her pocketbook—down the three flights of stairs rather than wait for the slow elevator to respond to her signal, and out into the night. Surely there must be a taxi—she looked up and down the lighted thoroughfare — and then she gave a sob of relief. One had drawn up to the hospital curb.

"The Leigh home on Lake Shore drive, and hurry! I'll pay you double!"

He had obeyed her instructions, and soon she was at the Leigh boat landing.

For a moment, Peter hesitated. There was no one around, although a light burned in the boathouse.

Then swiftly she ran to the end of the pier and knelt and laid her hands on the rope that held the speedboat. It responded quickly to her pull and rode gracefully over the water to the end of the pier.

The key to the ignition was dangling on its chain. "Help me——" and she threw the motor over. She grasped the wheel firmly and headed the craft out toward that brilliant mass of light against the water. There were shouts from the pier as the doors of the boathouse were thrown open and light streamed out.

The brilliant mass of light was drawing nearer, and back there were more lights on the pier.

The blare of a jazz orchestra drowned out everything but high-pitched laughter and shuffling feet.

It was a brilliant spectacle. She went around the deck, bright with lights. Hobo was not to be seen. Neither was Marilyn. She passed a member of the crew and stopped him.

"Dr. Hobart, please——"

"Sorry, sister, but I don't know one from the other. Look in the dark corners. Plenty of them."

It was ten minutes to 11. Just one more hour to get back to the hospital.

And then she was crying out as she again went around the decks: "Hobo, Hobo."

Suddenly he was standing before her, his face stern, and Marilyn stood beside him, her hand through his arm. They had stepped out of a little alcove formed by close-drawn awnings on the rear deck.

"Peter!"

"You must go at once, Hobo! Please."

"Go where?" sharply.

"To the hospital, Hobo. Mrs. Grayson must be operated on at once."

"Indeed and Glenn is not going, Mona Peterquinn!" from Marilyn.

Peter ignored her. "Hobo, you must! Mrs. Grayson refuses to let any one else do it and she will die unless it is done at once! And if Dr. Blackwell finds out——. Oh, Hobo——"

"Come, Glenn, let's dance. There's our favorite waltz. Mona, if you like, I'll have some refreshments sent up to you—here. And there may be some of the old crowd who would like to see you——"

"Hobo," Peter pleaded. "I'll never ask another thing of you—never, if you will go now! You know, Dr. Blackwell said if you infringed on the rules just once more—and if Mrs. Grayson dies——. Please, Hobo——"

Marilyn's hand had slipped down his arm until her white fingers were intertwined with his, and she started toward the deck where they were dancing. "Come, Glenn——"

"Hobo, you have no right to be here after 12."

"Glenn!" impatiently from Marilyn. A number of the dancers had gathered around, but Peter did not look at them. She was looking straight at Glenn Hobart.

For a brief second he stood silent. Then his eyes swept the assembled guests that formed a half circle about them; swept past Peter to rest on Marilyn, who stood beside him. He withdrew his hand from hers.

"Peter is right," he said briefly. "I'm going with her, Marilyn. I have no right to be here after 12, anyway. My job is back there," and he jerked his sleek black head in direction of the city. "I've had a corking good time, though——"

It was ten minutes to 12 when they entered the hospital door. There had been no words spoken on that long drive through the night back to the hospital in Hobo's car.

It was ten minutes after 12 when Mrs. Grayson was wheeled into the operating room, Peter in a fresh starched uniform and cap walking beside her, holding tight to the withered little hand in hers, and it was fifteen minutes after 12 when Hobo in his long white coat and face-mask looked down at the old lady and said:

"We're going to make you look and feel like 16, Mrs. Grayson. * * *"

"All's well," Peter was whispering as she did his bidding, the commands uttered in sharp low tones.

"ALL'S well," she whispered across the bed when Hobo came into the room as the eastern sky was becoming streaked with color several hours later. "You did a fine job, Hobo."

"Peter * * *" brokenly.

"All's well, Hobo," she whispered again cheerfully.

He was coming around the foot of the bed, and his big hand covered hers and held it tight.

"Peter," he whispered again. "I can never tell you. * * *"

No, he could never tell her that he loved her. But that was all right—if he was happy. She tried to smile up at him but the smile was twisted. His hands were on her shoulders.

"Peter, I'm a fool. And I didn't know just how big a fool I was until I saw you standing there—last night—on the deck of that gilded skiff — in that wrinkled uniform and that cap over your ear * * * Peter, dear. * * *

"Peter, darling. * * *"

His arms were slipping about her shoulders.

"All's well—now," he whispered, his face against hers. "And always will be when we're together. Say it, Peter. * * *"

"All's well, Hobo," she choked, her head against his white shoulder.

"Well!" came a weak voice from the bed. "It's about time, Dr. Norbert, that you knew this sweet child loved you. * * *"

"Not any more than I love her, Mrs. Grayson. And you'd better hurry up and get well because Peter's nursing days are nearly over. We're going to Vienna. * * *"

"Then all's well," sighed the invalid, turning her head to the wall. "And I'll just go back to sleep. Don't mind me, children. * * *"

And as Hobo's lips found Peter's, they repeated together:

"All's well. * * *"

FOR THE WASHINGTON POST BOYS AND GIRLS

The Junior Post.

SECTION OF THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 16, 1932.

THE TIME IS SHORT FOR HALLOWEEN CONTRIBUTIONS

Neatness in Preparation Prime Factor in the View of Editors

Dear Post Boys and Girls: The editor of the Junior Post is very much interested in the good times the boys and girls of the Junior Post are having, taking hikes through the woods with Girl Scout troops and with the teachers in the school. So many letters and stories have come in telling us of those good times that we know most of the readers of the Junior Post enjoy the out-of-doors.

Hurry up, those of you who have not sent in Halloween stories, poems or drawings. Do not forget the $5 prize for the best story on "Why I admire Theodore Roosevelt," for the Sunday before his birthday, Navy Day, October 27.

Ding-How is still calling for ideas for his Christmas card. The editor would like some Christmas card suggestions, too. The best Christmas card for Ding-How will receive a prize of $1 and the best one for the editor will receive a $1 prize, too.

Well, the football season is on. The editor is very glad to hear that so many of the boys of the Junior Post play the game. We all want to see our local colleges and schools win, of course. Any kind of sport that takes us out of doors is good for all of us, and Washington is certainly at its best for out-of-door games this time of the year.

We notice a great improvement in the stories, poems and drawings contributed by a number of our members who have been sending in their work to The Junior Post since they were small children. Some of our favorite members have become 18 during the past summer, and therefore beyond The Junior Post age. But we are all interested in the work they do, and they, in turn, keep a careful eye on the work of the boys and girls of The Junior Post. Some of the former Junior Post writers are now artists and writers on newspapers and magazines. They always take a friendly interest in the little paper in which their first efforts were printed.

The Junior Post boys and girls should watch carefully when their work is printed to discover the changes and corrections in it, for that is the way to learn. Of course, the editor expects the words to be spelled correctly and the stories to be in form when they are sent in, but some corrections are made in order to have them conform to the editorial ideas of The Junior Post.

Some of the stories sent in recently have not been neat. So the editor selects the work of a boy or girl who has sent in neat work. We do not always have room for all the work sent in. It is only fair to choose that which shows care and effort on the part of The Junior Post members.

The stories must all be written on one side of the paper only and be spelled correctly. If you are not sure of the spelling of a word, look it up in the dictionary.

Bird Kingdom.

(Awarded $1.)

The robin is a red-breasted bird brown wings, back and tail. They are alert, wide-awake songsters, always cheering the gloomy folks who have the blues. The robin greatly benefits mankind by destroying many harmful insects. They make their homes in parks, orchards and around dwellings. The nest is built of grass and twigs, held together with string and lined with mud. The three or four eggs are greenish blue.

The English sparrow is an invader of all parts of this country. They are brown and tan in color. The male has a dark streak around its neck and its cheeks are white. The English sparrows are very noisy little chaps and are also very destructive. They multiply very rapidly and are therefore very hard to become rid of. Their nests are built around dwellings and if possible they will intrude into bird houses which were not intended for them. Their nest is built of all manner of rubbish and trash. The three to five eggs are white, with bluish black spots. They live upon any substance which may be in any way eatable.

The Jenny Wren is a small bird, only about 2½ inches long. They are one of our most frequent housers. The wren, in color, greatly resembles the English and American sparrows. The wrens are gay little songsters, always busy with their own affairs. They are helpful in that they kill harmful grubs and insects. If a bird house is available the wren usually builds within, but if not, it builds a dainty little nest in a vine or bush. There are only two eggs, which are tiny and speckled.

After the Rain.

We had been having excessively warm weather. The sky was of brightest blue, and a blazing sun sent down its rays upon scorching pavements, and wilted flower gardens.

Gradually grim, threatening storm clouds made their way across the sky, and suddenly large raindrops came pelting downwards. People hurried into their homes and closed all windows and doors. The clouds seemed to burst, and pour upon the earth a pent-up fury of water.

Then, just as suddenly as it had come, the storm ceased. A cool breeze gently stirred the trees and flowers that gratefully lifted up their faces and smiled merrily. People coming out of their homes settled themselves comfortably upon their porches, and gazed up at the gorgeous rainbow that shed its rosy color upon the freshened appearances of all.

Robert Louis Stevenson.

Robert Louis Stevenson, one of the best known writers, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, November 13, 1850.

As a child Stevenson was weak and ailing and probably if his parents had not kept constant watch over him the world might never have gained the experience of reading his works. As a consequence of his fragile health he became an ardent lover of books and his desire to become a writer increased daily.

His education was made irregular because of his feeble health. In 1867 he entered the University of Edinburgh where he studied civil engineering and was awarded a silver medal for an essay on an improved lighthouse. Later, in 1871, he began to study law and was admitted to the bar in 1875.

As Stevenson made no attempt to practice law, the next few years of his life was spent in travels. It was while traveling he met Mrs. Osborne, a widow, whom he later married. It was out of a suggestion of his stepson that he began work upon "Treasure Island."

Later when his health became bad he found it necessary to take up his residence elsewhere than Edinburgh. He selected an island in the South Seas and took up his residence there. Here he enjoyed such health and vigor amid the picturesque surroundings that he felt better than ever before. Because of Stevenson's capacity for friendship he soon won the stanch support of the natives who built for him the "Road to the Loving Heart."

When Stevenson was in the midst of his work he was stricken with apoplexy, from which he never recovered consciousness and passed away painlessly in the course of the evening.

Stevenson was classed as an essayist and poet. The simplicity of his masterpieces make it hard for the reader to understand the work put on his writings. It is wonderful to think that a man, in so short a life, and wracked by illness so often, could write so many stories, poems and essays, every page containing a charm all his own.

Nature's Secret.

When we wander in open spaces,
The court where Dame Nature reigns,
Do we ever study the faces
Of the woodfolk in dells or lanes?

The wood is a haven of secrets,
This home of the birds and tall trees,
'Tis really a long-kept secret,
That whispered on the evening breeze.

And when we walk through the forest,
We may be told in some way
Of this secret within the forest,
Disclosed as a duty each day.

To every folk of the woodland,
Dame Nature revealed the truth
Of their duties, to cheer all the human,
The aged and the gay, laughing youth.

The Football Season.

All of us Junior Post members will be thrilled to hear of the season's opening games. At least, all of us who are in any way interested in the good old gridiron sport. For cool, crisp weather will bring with it college combats, flying pennants and mighty cheers for the yard runners.

Practice having already begun, we grow more and more enthusiastic as the days draw near. Some of us are already prepared, having our scrap books and lineups in good shape. Take a tip, all of you football fans, and make a neat account of all schedules, conveniently arranged in a loose-leaf note book, or regular football scrap book, and you will enjoy the sport even more.

Here's hoping the season will be a humdinger, and all fans, whether spectators or just radio listeners will enjoy every movement of that good old pigskin. EMILY FRANKLIN.

The Pets' Corner

Edited by Ding-How of Hydegree,
(Mascot of The Junior Post.)

Bow, wow, wow! Well, here we are, right in the middle of the political situation in Washington and listening to what all the important men and women are saying on every street corner and over the radio. I feel so important being an editor, because an editor knows a lot. A real editor like I am, knows a lot that he does not write on his typewriter.

Sandy Orkney Terrier Gordon has just been here trying to tell me that he knows more than I do because he listens to the cases down in the court while he is waiting for the Judge. Who wants to sit in a court anyway? I have never seen a piece of beefsteak or ice cream in a courtroom. Not that an editor thinks much of food, of course, but it is necessary to eat in order to live.

Hop Toy says he has a good story for our paper all about Little Hemmie swimming across the pool all by himself. Hop Toy is rather lazy, I think, and, anyway, he always lets Mary Anne write his letters. But I would like to tell Mr. Hop Toy that he can not expect to keep his job if he does not do his work. Saying he has a good story does not help any. We would have a very funny looking pets' corner if all the stories were just "I know a good story" and were never written out.

Mike Great Dane goes for a long walk every day, but Mr. Tweet Canary says he is too busy to wander about. Mr. Tweet is writing a new opera, which is to be dedicated to the next President of the United States. Mr. Tweet is very careful not to mention any names, because he wants to be invited to the White House the next administration, and he is on the side of the administration, no matter what that administration may be. Of course, Mr. and Mrs. Small Owl, who live in the White House grounds, are not preparing to move. They stay there any way, no matter what political suns may shine.

Weejie Elkhound is working hard this campaign, although he telephoned me that he is rather tired posing for his pictures. Any way, Weejie is very vain and I do not think he is nearly as bored as he seems to be. He is getting ready to give a rousing welcome to Peggy Anne, Peter and Baby Joan, if they come to the White House for Christmas. They certainly have a lot of fun, those children. The White House grounds are such a good place to run and romp in a way children have, encouraged by Weejie, of course.

Well, I have had some ideas for my Christmas card sent in, but I am not satisfied yet, although one of the ones sent in may win the $1 prize. Hurry up, the rest of you boys and girls and pets, and send me in more of the cards.

Dear Ding-How: Please forgive my saying that you did not publish my last letter, a little while ago because my mistress found one that she had missed and in it was the letter. We have a young girl living with us now and she is so nice. She says she is going to live with us during school. Even though I am not an editor I can sit on my hind legs for half a minute or more. Jean's going to give me a bath tomorrow because my master has an infected finger. I don't like to take baths, but then I always get a romp on an old red sweater. Well, so long. I guess I'll close. As ever I am a great big SCAMP.

(Jean Frost).

Dear Ding-How: I thank you very much for printing my last letter. It made me so happy when I heard it I felt like bursting into song. Tra-la-la-la-la! I can't help but brag when the family all tell me I can sing so beautiful, but there's one thing sure. I am not going to sing when that new girl is near here and she won't go away when I tell her. Well, here comes that girl with some food. I believe I will make friends with her, so tra-la-la-la. I am ever the singing

BOBBY.

(Jean Frost).

Dear Ding-How: Hello, old scout, how are you? I am fine. Yesterday my mistress gave me a bath. How I hate baths. I wish my hair was black instead of white and then the dirt wouldn't show and then my mistress couldn't tell if I am clean or dirty.

We had a storm last night and the thunder and lightning scared me so that I couldn't go to sleep for an hour.

A little canary bird came to live with us and he told me to inclose this letter for him. I have to stop now, Dingy. JELLO.

How Roy Earned His Bicycle

It was Saturday morning. Roy Mason was lying in the hammock in the yard.

"How nice it would be to have a bicycle," thought Roy. "I would like to earn some money to buy one. Oh, I have it!" he suddenly exclaimed, and jumped out of the hammock and ran into the house.

"Mother," he said, "could I have a rummage sale?"

"Why, I guess so, but where would you have it?"

"I could have it in our alleyway," said Roy.

"Well, I guess it will be all right. Run upstairs to the attic and look in that big brown trunk and you will find some old clothes we do not need, and you can sell them," said his mother.

A few minutes later Roy had some boxes and boards in the alley and was fixing them up.

About an hour later his mother heard him calling:

"Rummage sale! rummage sale!" Many people stopped to buy something. Soon Roy's mother called to him to put away his rummage and come to dinner.

"Well, Roy," said his father, "how's business?"

"Fine!" said Roy. "I made $2.83. Is that enough to buy a bicycle?"

"Well, son," said his father, "I don't want to disappoint you but you will have to earn a lot more to buy a bicycle."

When next Saturday came, Roy sold newspapers and made 50 cents. No, that was not quite enough to buy a bicycle.

"Roy," said his father, "why don't you run errands for the neighbors?"

"I guess I will!" said Roy, and he made 75 cents in one day by going to the store and raking up the yards for the neighbors, in one whole day.

"I guess I will sell some of the old rummage left over," said Roy the next Saturday, and he did, and made $4.50 this time by selling rummage from morning to afternoon.

When Monday came Roy had to go to school. The teacher called him up to her desk. She said the principal wanted to see him. Roy hurried to the principal's office and found that the principal wanted him to take an important letter to the postoffice. Roy made a quarter by going to the postoffice.

"Roy," said his father one day, "I know a man who has a very good second-hand bicycle. You have saved up $7.80, and he is willing to sell it for that amount of money. What do think about it?"

"It suits me," said Roy "A second-hand bicycle is just as good as a new one." So Roy got his bicycle.

Dear Editor: I am inclosing two drawings which I hope you will like and publish.

Thanks for awarding me the prize on the cartoon last Sunday.

I will close, hoping to see these pictures published. A true member.

CHARLOTTE W. REA.

Crozet, Va.

Dear Editor: This is the first time that I have ever sent anything to the Junior Post, but just the same I read it every Sunday. I like it very much.

I am inclosing a drawing called "The Quarrel."

I am far from an artist, but love to draw, so I thought I would try it just once and see if it would be published.

I will be looking for my drawing in The Junior Post next Sunday.

Dear Editor: I am sending in a drawing which I hope you will publish. The name of it is "The High School Girl." I read The Junior Post every Sunday and enjoy it very much. I will close, wishing the dear old Junior Post the best of luck. Your reader.

MARGARET HOUSER (age 15).

Cherrydale, Va.

Dear Editor: Thank you so much for printing some of the things I sent in a little while ago and as a reward I am sending something more. I am keeping a scrapbook of things that are published. Only those that I know can have a place. I hope you will excuse some of the mistakes that are made, as I have a cold and make more mistakes than usual. Here's to the best of luck for you. As ever, from JEAN FROST.

1328 Jonquil street northwest.

Dear Editor: Thank you very much for publishing my writing last Sunday. Inclosed you will find a story, poem and a letter to Ding-How. Sincerely, ROSEMARY DERMODY.

440 Sixth street southwest.

Dear Ding-How: Allow me to introduce myself. The name is Napoleon, but just call me Happy, as everyone else does. I have a pretty good time in life. Three square meals a day, a fine yard to play in. Could you ask for more? You might call me a nature-loving cat, because butterflies and birds are my hobby. Well, Ding-How, I'll run along, but let us hope we will be stanch friends.

HAPPY.

P. S.—My mistress is Rosemary Dermody.

Dear Editor—Enclosed you will find description of 40 birds on which I have worked industriously since I read in the Junior Post of the bird contest. Hoping they may be given recognition by you and the Junior Post. I am yours sincerely,

LOUISE B. WILSON.

(You have certainly worked hard. We can not print all your story at once, but will print some from time to time.)

Dear Editor—I hope you will publish my little drawing in the Junior Post. This is my first picture I have ever drawn for your paper.

Sincerely yours,

The Troublesome Egg.

"Oh, come now," said the father bird to the mother. "Never mind that other egg. Let's get busy and feed the children."

"Now, listen here," said the mother. "It's my own private egg, and I am going to do what I please with it."

"It's never going to hatch, and besides it's too stale."

"Now, listen to them quarreling over that egg again," said some other birds.

"Tend to your own business, and I'll tend to mind," said the mother bird.

"Push it out of the nest," said the father. "It will never hatch."

"Oh!" said the mother bird. "It's moving!"

"Pshaw!" said the father bird. "It was only the wind blowing the egg."

But at last the shell burst open, and there stood the smallest bird.

"What did I tell you?" said the mother bird.

"Oh, well," said the father bird. "I guess I was wrong, after all!"

Fiction and Biography

Fiction is imaginary prose in narrative form which treats with imaginary events. It is not true and is something which some author has imagined that happened. There are many kinds of fiction.

Biography is the written history of someone's life. It contains the important facts which have taken place in one's life. It is true, but fiction is not. ELLEN BEATY.

Autumn Leaves.

Now comes the time when Jack Frost is expected out and on his way. We see the leaves have all turned to pretty colors. Now Jack Frost has been taking credit all these years that he is not responsible for it all. It isn't the frost that brings the colors to the leaves.

During the growing season the leaves contain three pigments, green, red and yellow. The green pigment is formed only at summer temperature; this and moisture are the things that bring these changes.

More beautiful colors are produced when the temperature does not quite reach the freezing point during this period. An early frost prevents the formation of a special layer of cells at the base of the petiol of the leaf. If this is formed more sugars are held in the leaf and go to form more brilliant colors. If the sap of a tree is of acid character the leaves turn red. When the sap is alkaline the colors left are a shade of violet. The yellows have been present all along but overshadowed by the green. As the green goes the rich colors of autumn appear. GRACE LEE (Age 12).

Des Moines.

Des Moines is the capital and largest city of Iowa. Its chief building is its capitol, which cost about $3,000,000. As a manufacturing center, the city is of considerable importance. Among the leading products are those of the furnaces, foundries and machine shops, flour and grist mills, planing mills, creameries, bridge and iron work. The city is one of the most productive coal cities in the State. The name of the city was taken from that of the river, which in turn is supposed to represent a corruption by the French of the original Indian name Moingona.

Fall.

Pitter, patter, pitter patter,
Rain is falling down,
The world is bleak and misty;
The sun has left the town.

Streets are wet and muddy,
Grass has turned to brown,
Gay leaves have died and withered,
And are trampled in the ground.

The wind is blowing strongly,
Howling round and round;
The world awaits the summer
And is glad when it is found.

Christmas Campaign Planned for Knighthood of Youth

THE JUNIOR POST AIRSHIP

"We will have to fix the airship up for the Halloween parade," said the pilot. "Perhaps we can get a prize for a float. I understand they will only be given for automobile floats."

"It is a good thing that the District of Columbia Washington Bicentennial committee has taken charge of the carnival in connection with the greater National committee and the Board of Trade on Halloween night for every one will have a better time," said the editor.

"My sister's children always dress up and I think we will get out the family car and have a float in the parade. Of course most of the floats are to be entered by groups," said the pilot.

"President and Mrs. Hoover will have a good time watching the events too," asserted the pilot. "They certainly like to see young people have a good time. I took a flight down to Virginia Beach when Mrs. Hoover was attending the Girl Scout convention down there. She understands girls and works real hard as honorary president of the Girl Scout organization," said the pilot.

"Yes, she does," said the editor. "She made a good speech last Thursday, the one that static interfered with the week before at Virginia Beach."

"Thursday was a busy day in Washington for everybody, anyway," declared the editor. "First, there was the laying of the corner stone of the new Supreme Court Building, with Chief Justice Hughes and the associate justices all present, and President Hoover making the principal speech. Then there were the meetings of the American Bar Association and then the White House reception, which was an unusually brilliant one."

They circled over Yorktown, Va., and reminded each other of the celebration to be held there October 19 to commemorate the surrender of Yorktown by the British.

"The Community Chest is getting ready for its campaign, for in spite of the depression Washington people are very generous in their contributions to the needy of Washington," said the editor as they swooped down to look into the windows of the office of the Community Chest, where a four-day school for leaders was going on.

In New York they looked into the studio of Howard Chandler Christy and got a view of Amelia Earhardt Putnam, transatlantic flier, admiring the new portrait Mr. Christy has painted of her.

Then off they flew over the sea to London Town where they saw young Prince Michael of Roumania saying a sad farewell to his mother, Princess Helene, the divorced wife of the young prince's father, King Carol of Roumania. Prince Michael would liked to stay with his mother a longer time, but the king ordered him home, and princes have to obey orders just like other boys. Some day Michael will be king again in order to be a good king and know how to command he must first learn to obey.

Near Balmoral Castle in Scotland they saw the Prince of Wales, heir to the British throne, and his brother, Prince George, riding along wearing the Scottish caps which these royal young men always wear in Scotland as a compliment to their Scottish subjects.

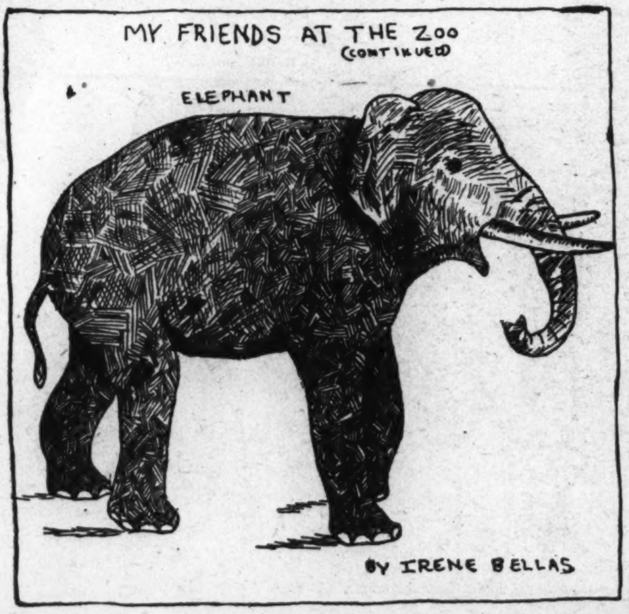
Then they flew to Berlin to see the American prodigy, Ruggiero Ricci, make his debut as a violinist with the Philharmonic Orchestra. So impressive is the talent of this young boy that he received a personal visit from Chancellor von Papen.

In Barcelona they looked down on a cheering throng welcoming the Spanish Premier Manuel A Zana bringing the autonomy statute which were the documents giving self rule to the province.

"There goes Queen Wilhelmina's golden state coach used by rulers of the Netherlands for generations," said the pilot as they saw the Queen of Holland riding in state along the streets by soldiers and outriders. As they looked a company of royal marines snapped into attention showing Wilhelmina's armed forces are present and accounted for.

"We will have to get back and look after the political situation with the presidential election just a month off," said the editor.

The pilot turned the airship towards home.



Endless Chain Set In Motion to Gain Knights for Order

Come one, come all ye members of the Knighthood of Youth. Let us engage in a quest that will end on Christmas Eve. Some of the members of the Knighthood of Youth who have come into the headquarters of the Knighthood in The Washington Post Building, this week, have suggested that each member of the Knighthood of Youth have as his goal the bringing of three other members in by Christmas time. These mystic three new members will then start out on other quests and each one bring in three more members by Easter.

This endless chain of Knighthood enrollment is lots of fun. Soon each member who has brought in three members will begin to count how many members of the Knighthood they have really enlisted. For if each three members get three other members and each of these gets three more, and so on into an endless chain of the mystic three, the number will grow to such proportions that the members of the Knighthood engaged in the beginning of this Mystic Three crusade will be able to feel that they have climbed many steps up to the Castle of Deeds Well Done.

Exaggeration Bad, Understatement Is Also Half Truth

Learn not to exaggerate. Many boys and girls of today, as well as men and women, are so apt to add to a story when it is told.

Sometimes this exaggeration does much harm, for it puts other people and sometimes yourself or circumstances in a false light. Many people who would not tell a deliberate falsehood will add things that are untrue to a true statement and thus tell a falsehood after all.

The other extreme is only telling a half truth. If you keep back some of the story it is as bad as exaggeration. Of course, it is not necessary to volunteer to tell a story which is going to hurt some one else. Unless it is in the interest of truth and justice and fair play it is better to keep still. But, if you do speak, tell the whole truth and not just part of it.

When you tell a story, be sure that it is what you know to be true, not just what you think might have happened. In others words, be straightforward, be honest, be truthful, and, above all, do not tell falsehoods or bear false witness against any one.

The Lake in the Moon

The silvery moon is high above,
Over the lake it shines,
The soft silvery light
Fills the heart with delight,
Like the sight would be to the blind.

The trees cast shadows o'er the calm
leke,
And the waters so smooth,
Seem not ever to move.
The dawn is beginning to break,
Then the birds begin to wake.

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"Well, we had better look for biographies this time for we have many important birthdays in this month," said the Story Book Lady as she waited for the boys and girls of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the Knighthood of Youth to start on the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land.

"I like biographies, any way," said Anne. "Mother tells us that we can get inspiration from the lives of great men and women."

"I feel like that, too," said Alice, "and the book publishers seem to realize that even boys and girls want to read biographies in these times."

"I feel like that, too," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land. "I tell my grandsons, Blick and Flick and Little Mick, to read about the lives and deeds of the great and try to be like them. They will be able to do much good in the world. They are good boys."

"I am sure they are," said the Story Book Lady, and all the members of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the Knighthood of Youth joined in the expression of faith in the three little Gnome boys whom they had come to know so well since the pilgrimages to Story Book Land began for the boys and girls of The Junior Post.

"The Queen told us to find out some books for the Story Book Fairy Land schools, especially biographies, suitable for the children of Story Book Land to read," said the Story Book Fairy, as she flew out of the Fairy Tale Woods in her golden airplane followed by the Story Book Fairy Children, Merry and Jolly, in golden airplanes.

"Well, we will try to please everybody," said the Story Book Lady with a laugh as she led the way toward the first book street.

"Hello!" said William, who was on the lookout for the kind of books he wanted to read as usual. "Right here is a good place to begin. Just see these book streets, Story Book Lady."

"Why, yes, they will do splendidly for us today," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses. "Let me see, 'Peeps at Abraham Lincoln,' by Max Vivier (Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York). I am sure we will all like this as much as we did the 'Peeps at George Washington' by this same author. And, of course, the illustrations of the life of Lincoln, drawn by the author, are wonderful."

"I think so, too, Story Book Lady," said William, "and here is the book of which you spoke down this next book street, 'Peep at George Washington.'" Vivier is a great writer and the foreword by Gen. Pershing is well worth reading.

"This is a nice book," said Jack, as they came to another book street.

"Yes, it is," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses." Let me see. It is called 'The Way to Glory, and Other Stories,' by Marian Hurd McNeely, with all the nice pictures by Joan Esley (Longmans, Green & Co., New York). Dorothy Canfield has written the introductions and assisted in getting the stories together, for the author died within the last two years. She has left these stories, which will be a delight to us for many a year."

"Oh, here is a nice story book for girls our age," said Maude, who had just entered high school this year. "Tell us about it, dear Story Book Lady."

"Of course I will," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses. "Let me see. It is called 'Nancy, a Story of the Younger Set,' by Mildred Wasson, with illustrations by Robby Beebe (Harper & Bros., New York). Nancy has a lot of adventures, some sorrows, but altogether she is a very nice girl."

"I am sure she is," said Anne, "and I do so want to read about her."

"Well," said the Story Book Lady, "put it down on your Christmas lists."

Fellow Citizens

Forget politics for the time being and get closer to the home plate. This is the time for every man to come to the aid of himself. Things are getting brighter . . . and prices are beginning to rise. There is an opportunity in Washington today to get the jump on rising prices . . . especially in this sale of Men's Clothing.

Lee Tracy, in a scene from "Washington Merry-Go-Round," coming to R-K-O Keith's Soon.

Men, let's get down to brass tacks. The woolen market is on the rise. Which means that soon you will have to pay more for fine clothing. Because of strategic planning for Hecht Month we got in ahead of the rising market. Our foresight made it possible for us to go the whole hog on value. Imagine a Sheldon 2-Trouser Suit like ours for $23.44. Or a Sheldon Overcoat for $23.44. It's unthinkable to sell a tuxedo or a full dress suit of this fine quality for $23.44. We've got a plentiful supply of these garments on hand. After they're gone it's dollars to doughnuts that the price won't be duplicated for clothing of this quality. Hecht Month is all yours, gentlemen . . . if you need new clothing . . . and we think many of you do (remember the Forgotten Man) . . . for your own good self make the most of this opportunity.

HAWK-SHAW THE DETECTIVE
THE MYSTERIOUS EPISODE OF THE MISSING PAVEMENT BY WATSO
HAWKSHAW – SOMEONE HAS ACTUALLY STOLEN THE VERY SIDEWALK FROM THE FRONT OF MY HOUSE !
INCREDIBLE -MY DEAR COLONEL
SIDEWALK SNITCHING ! -A NEW FORM OF CRIME I MUST SAY
MOST PECULIAR ! – WHAT INCIDENTS -IF ANY- TOOK PLACE JUST PRIOR TO THE DISCOVERY OF YOUR LOSS ?
WELL- YOU SEE- I JUST LAID THE PAVEMENT LAST NIGHT – THE CONCRETE MUST HAVE STILL BEEN WET WHEN TIGHTWADDO LEFT MY HOUSE EARLY THIS MORNING AFTER A NIGHT OF POKER, PLAYING "FARTHING-ANTE"
AS A MERE WHIM MIGHT, I INQUIRE WERE TIGHTWADDO'S LOSSES SUFFICIENT TO MAKE HIM FORGET TO CAREFULLY PICK HIS STEPS ON LEAVING IN THE DARK ?
HE DROPPED TUPPENCE HA'PENNY -BUT SURELY THAT CAN'T ACCOUNT FOR THE LOSS OF MY SIDEWALK
CERTAINLY NOT BANG
CLANK!
ONLY INDIRECTLY - I'LL ADMIT -HOWEVER- WHAT IS THAT PECULIAR CLANKING NOISE IN TIGHTWADDO'S BACK YARD ?
AH - TIGHTWADDO SO YOU FOUND IT NECESSARY TO PROCURE A WHEELBARROW AND REMOVE THE COLONEL'S ENTIRE SIDEWALK SIMPLY TO RETRIEVE AN IMBEDDED PAIR OF BOOTS
STRIKE ME JOLLY WELL PINK
I COULDN'T LET THEM STICK THERE- THEY'VE ONLY BEEN HALF-SOLED SIXTEEN TIMES !

SIDNEY SMITH
TILDA- CALL THE TAILOR AND ASK HIM IF MY SUIT IS READY YET!
THE TELEPHONE DON'T WORK-
DON'T WORK? WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH IT?
I DON'T KNOW- BUT IT'S OUT OF ORDER-
WELL- FIND OUT! CALL UP INFORMATION AND ASK WHAT THE TROUBLE IS?
CALL UP INFORMATION- WHEN THE PHONE IS OUT OF ORDER- THERE'S BRAINS FOR YOU- CALL UP YOURSELF- OLD LAZY BONES!
THAT MAN IS SO LAZY- HE RUNS HIS CAR OVER A ROCK TO KNOCK THE ASHES OFF HIS CIGAR-
PAPA IS THERE ALWAYS SNOW UP ON TOP OF THE MOUNTAINS?
ON THE HIGHEST PEAKS- CHESTER- YES-
DOES IT ALWAYS STAY THERE? DOESN'T IT EVER MELT?
ON SOME OF THE HIGHEST MOUNTAIN TOPS THE SNOW IS THREE OR FOUR HUNDRED FEET DEEP- IT NEVER MELTS- AT A CERTAIN ELEVATION THERE IS NO VEGETATION- NO TREES OR ANYTHING-
WHY ARE THERE NO TREES ON TOP OF A MOUNTAIN? CAN'T ANYTHING GROW THERE AT ALL? WHY CAN'T THE TREES GROW?
BECAUSE TREES DEMAND A WARMER CLIMATE- THEY NEED RAIN AND SUNSHINE- IT'S TOO COLD FOR THEM TO GROW-
WHY DOESN'T HAIR GROW ON YOUR HEAD?
WHAT ARE YOU DOING- GETTING FUNNY? MAKING FUN OF YOUR FATHER'S BALD HEAD-
WELL- FOR THE SAME REASON THAT GRASS DON'T GROW ON A BUSY PAVED STREET-
NO- BUT I'VE OFTEN WONDERED-
THAT GIVES YOU A PRETTY GOOD IDEA- DOESN'T IT? YOU KNOW WHY NOW- DON'T YOU?
SURE- HOW ON EARTH COULD GRASS GET UP THROUGH CONCRETE?

DICK TRACY

HMM-MM-
KIDS - ALL YOU DETECTIVES KEEP AN EYE ON THIS FELLOW- HE'S DAN MUCELLI
PAT, WHERE DID YOU PUT THOSE PAPERS OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN KENNETH GREBB AND MEMBERS OF HIS DOPE RING THAT I GOT AHOLD OF WHILE I WAS UP NORTH?
WHAT? WHY THEY'RE GONE, TRACY! THEY WERE HID IN THE HOLLOW STEM OF THIS TRICK TELEPHONE - I PUT THEM THERE MYSELF. THEY'RE GONE!
NOW, NOW, TAKE IT EASY, FELLOW. HERE THEY ARE. THE KID, JUNIOR, WAS FOOLING WITH THAT PHONE, AND DISCOVERED THEM YESTERDAY. YOU'D BETTER HIDE THEM SOME PLACE ELSE UNTIL WE NEED THEM.
HONESTLY, TRACY, I WAS SCARED TO DEATH - THERE FOR A MINUTE.
INCIDENTALLY, PAT, THAT KID'S GOING TO OUT-DETECTIVE EITHER ONE OF US BEFORE LONG - HE'S SMART AS A TACK - WHY, RIGHT NOW HE'S DOWNTOWN TRYING TO GET A JOB WORKING AFTER SCHOOL.
AND SO LET US LOOK INTO THE APARTMENT OF DAN MUCELLI, PARTNER OF THE LATE KENNETH GREBB, WHO SINCE THE PASSING OF HIS CHIEF, FINDS HIMSELF HEAD OF THE RING.
THOSE PAPERS SHOW HOW WE OPERATED - AND OUR WHOLE HISTORY! WE'VE GOT TO GET THEM!
SH-H! THERE'S SOMEONE AT THE DOOR DAN.
HELLO, DAN, THE KID'S OUT HERE.
GOOD - BRING HIM IN, TEXIE.
HELLO, SON - WELL - WHAT HAVE YOU GOT TO SAY FOR YOURSELF?
NOTHIN' 'CEPT I SAW YER SIGN DOWNSTAIRS - SAYIN' BOY WANTED AND DIS LADY SAID SHE'D BRING ME TO D' BOSS. ARE YOU D' BOSS?
YES, WE NEED A BOY IN OUR OTHER BAKERY ACROSS TOWN TO MAKE DELIVERIES AND RUN ERRANDS - BUT YOU LOOK PRETTY YOUNG.
AW CHEE - I AIN'T SO YOUNG - I'M NINE.
ALL RIGHT - BE HERE TOMORROW AFTERNOON AND WE'LL TRY YOU OUT. YOU'LL GET TWO DOLLARS A WEEK. HERE, BUY YOURSELF AN ICE CREAM CONE ON THE WAY HOME.
TEXIE - YOU'RE SURE THAT'S THE RIGHT KID?
ABSOLUTELY, I'VE BEEN CULTIVATING HIS ACQUAINTANCE ALL WEEK - HE TOLD ME HE WANTED TO GET A JOB AND EARN MONEY LIKE TRACY DOES. THEN TODAY I BOUGHT HIM A SODA AND SAW TO IT WE WALKED PAST THE 'BOY-WANTED' SIGN.
I TELL YOU IT'S A SURE WAY TO GET THOSE PAPERS, DAN! BY WORKING THROUGH THE KID, I'LL FIND OUT WHERE THE DICK KEEPS 'EM AND THEN USE THE BRAT TO GET ME INTO THE HOUSE.
THAT NIGHT
LISTEN, TRACY, I GOT ME A REAL JOB WORKING AFTER SCHOOL. I'M GONNA GET TWO BUCKS A WEEK.
HE'LL BE MAKING MORE DOUGH THAN WE ARE, SOON.
LISTEN, JUNIOR - WHAT'S THE CHANCES OF BORROWING TWO BUCKS TILL SATURDAY?

THE PINK TERRACES OF NEW ZEALAND ACCLAIMED AS NATURE'S MOST MAGNIFICENT MASTERPIECE, WERE CREATED BY VOLCANIC ACTION . . . AND WERE UTTERLY DESTROYED IN THE SAME MANNER !
JESSE POMEROY- famous life prisoner, WAS PUT IN SOLITARY CONFINEMENT AT 13 . . . 40 YEARS LATER HE EMERGED A LEARNED MAN, MASTER OF 7 LANGUAGES . . .

The lavishness of nature is perhaps nowhere better shown than in the creation and destruction of the famous Pink and White Terraces of New Zealand, where one volcanic eruption on North Island spread terrace after terrace of beautiful pink and white stone as a bed of a waterfall—and another eruption completely obliterated the fascinating scene.

The creation of the pink and white terraces, scientists agree, was by volcanic eruption. Even before world travel became general, the fame of New Zealand's falls spread throughout the world, and drew many visitors to the island. Today the sight would undoubtedly be one of the most popular scenic wonders in the world.

But nature, in the same manner she created the magic falls, destroyed them. In 1886 a severe volcanic eruption blew the colorful bed of fragments and left, in its stead, a drab mass of volcanic lava and ash.

The last visitor to report the beauty of the terraces was Dr. Ralph of Melbourne, who visited the scene on June 1, 1886. Six days later, while another but ill-fated visitor was at the falls, the eruption took place. Black Crater, about which the disturbance centered, threw up a column of steam 15,000 feet for five days. Volcanic ash was strewn over 5,700 square miles.

The famed Pink and White Terraces were lost as a scenic wonder—but as late as 1904 tourists found pieces of beautiful pink rock that once formed what was probably the most beautiful natural wonder on earth.
